We have received your Letters lately presented unto Us by Mr. Windram of Liberton, and We accept graciously all the Expressions of Affection and Fidelity therein contained towards Us, with your tender resentment of Our present Condition, and the just indignation which you profess to have against the execrable Murder of our Father: and we believe that your intentions are as full of Candor towards us, as we are, and always really have been desirous to settle a clear and right intelligence between us and our Subjects of our ancient Kingdom of Scotland, which may be an assured foundation of their happiness and peace for the time to come, and an effectual means to root out all the seeds of Animosities and Divisions caused by these late Troubles, and also to re-unite the Hearts and Affections of our Subjects one to another, and of them all to Us their King and lawful Sovereign; to the end that by their obedience to our Royal and Just Authority, we may be put into a condition to maintain them in Peace and Prosperity, and to protect them in their Religion and Liberty, as it appertains to Us, according to our Charge and Office of a King. And as we have always resolved to contribute whatever is to be done by Us to obtain these good effects, and for the just satisfaction of all our Subjects in this Kingdom, We have now thought fit upon the return of Mr. Windram; to Command and desire you, to send unto us Commissioners sufficiently Authorized, to Treat and agree with us, both in relation to the Interest and Just satisfaction of our Subjects there: as also concerning the aid and assistance, which in reason we may expect from them, to bring and reduce the Murderers of our late most dear Father of happy Memory, to condign punishment, and to recover our just Rights in all our Kingdoms. And we will that they attend Us on the Fifteenth day of the moneth of March, at the Town of Breda, where We intend to be in order thereunto. And in confidence of a Treaty, as also to make known to you, and to all the World, that We desire to be agreed; We have resolved to address these unto you, under 1649 The substance of Windram's Message to the King.

The Kings Letter to the Committee of Estates in Scotland.

1649 the Name and Title of a Committee of Estates of our Kingdom of Scotland; and will and expect that you use this Grace no otherwise for any advantage to the prejudice of Us, or Our Affairs, beyond what We have given this Qualification and Title for, namely, only for the Treaty, and in order to it; although We have consideration sufficient, and very important to dissuade, and oblige us to do nothing in this kind antecedently at this time. Also We hope the confidence which We declare, to have in your clear and candid intentions towards Us will furnish you with strong Arguments to form in your selves a mutual confidence in Us, which by the blessing of God Almighty, by your just and prudent moderation, and by that greatest desire that We have to oblige all Our Subjects of that Kingdom, and by the means of the Treaty which We attend and hope for, may be a good foundation of a full and happy peace, and an assured security to this Nation for the time to come, which We assure you is wished of Us with passion, and We shall endeavour by all means in Our power to effect.

To the same effect also was a Letter to the Committee of the Kirk.

Montrose
solicits foreign Princes to send the King
Aid.

Montrose in the mean time was very busie, soliciting the King of Denmark, the Queen of Sweden, and other Princes for Money, Arms, and Men to be employed in the Kings service, but yet he was so generous, as to write to the King, To make an Agreement with the Estates of Scotland, so that he might be honourably and with safety restored to his Rights and Dignities, and rather than break off with them, to give consent to have him banished the Kingdom, that so he might receive no prejudice for his consideration.

informs Montrose of what had passed between him and the Estates in order to a Treaty.

But the King would by no means yield to his requests herein, declaring that he had found him so faithful all along, and to have performed such eminent Services, both to his Father and to himself, that he could not in Justice or in Honour leave him. And by a Letter which he sent to him on the thirtieth of January, he gave him a full account of the Address to him from Scotland, and the progress made towards the Treaty according to the tenour of his Letters by Windram, wherein he informed him,

That he licensed the Authority of the Committee of Estates for this Treaty onely, and that both for their own proper satisfaction, and to make known to all the World, that he desired to bring back his Subjects to their Duty rather by way of Sweetness and Amity, than by the rigour of Arms (if their obstinacy and the injustice of their Demands should constrain him to recover it by force) adding nevertheless, that he gave him full power to proceed very vigorously in his Enterprizes, not doubting but all his loyal Subjects of Scotland would joyn themselves with him, and by that means those that were otherwise disposed would submit themselves to Reason in the Treaty which he now accepted, or should be forced to it by Arms.

The Parliament forces the King to leave Jersey and go into France.

The Parliament of England, not willing to let the King be in quiet in Jersey, sent a considerable part of the English Fleet at Portsmouth, with store of Provision in order to the attacking of that Island, which put the King upon a speedy remove from thence to France; where he resided till the time appointed for the Treaty at Breda, drew near, and then he repaired thither.

Sir John Windram made all the haste he could to Scotland, and as soon as the Committee of Estates and Assembly of the Kirk, who sat apart, were met, he delivered his Message and Letters to them from the King.

The Committee of Estates upon perusing the Letter, chose out of themselves a sub-Committee of nine Lords and Burgeses, to consider what was most expedient to be done therein, and to present their opinions thereupon to the Committee of Estates, which was done; and thereupon they prepared a state of the Matter, and reported it to the Parliament at their first Meeting, which was in a while after; and the Parliament upon that Report chose a Committee of the Estates to meet with a Committee of the Kirk to consider of all Matters in order to the Treaty, and to nominate Commissioners for it, where after some Consultations, a Report was agreed on to be made by one part to the Committee of Estates, and by the other to the Assembly of the Kirk; and immediately the Commissioners were chosen.

Those for the Estates were the Earls of Cassels and Lothian, and the Lord Burley, and Sir John Windram of Liberton; and those from the Kirk were Mr. John Leviston, Mr. James Wood, and Mr. Broady, who were with all convenient haste dispatched to Breda, where they arrived a day before the King, and the next day after they went to meet him at Berghen op Zoom, and they came thence together to Breda on the sixteenth day of March, where the Commissioners, after two or three days of rest to compose themselves, and receive their Visits from their Friends, were conducted to their first Audience in the Presence-Chamber by my Lord Wentworth, Captain of the Kings Guards, who was sent with the Kings Coach to receive them. The Earl of Cassels addressed himself to the King in the name of the Commissioners of Parliament in a short Speech to this effect.

The Commissioners to treat with the King at Breda.

"That the Kingdom of Scotland upon his late Message, together with the consideration of all former Overtures with him, have now again sent to him these Propositions, which they humbly tender to his Majesty; not that they have thought to force him to a Compliance, through his Necessity, to his prejudice, or weary him by Importunities; but by making their humble submission, in which their desires, they hope, will appear so reasonable and just, that he will soon condescend unto them, which they humbly beg at his Hands. Assuring him, that by that means he will be most powerfull in the advancing and establishing his Throne; it being the nature of his Loyal Subjects, and all truly Noble Minds to be soonest overcome with such allurements. That in these humble Addresses they did manifest to the World their Loyalty and Constancy to him, neither was it their purpose to flatter, but to be faithful and free; that if he would please to condescend to what was propounded by the Kingdom of Scotland, it would make him happy, and give them some hopes to live at peace, under the shadow of the wings of his Government."

The Earl
of Cassels Speech to the King in behalf of the Commissioners of Parliament.

And 1649

Mr. Levi-ston's Speech for those of the Kirk.

And as soon as he had ended, the Commissioners of the Kirk having presented themselves to him, Mr. John Leviston made a Speech, wherein, He prest His Majesty to hearken to the joynt desires of the Estates and Kirk of Scotland, that so he might enjoy the Blessing of God, and be received by his People in comfort and peace to promote the work of the Lord, and make them happy.

After these Speeches, they produced their Commissions, and delivered their Letters, together with the Propositions from the Estates and Kirk of Scotland.

The Propositions were immediately read, which were as followeth:

Propositions from the Estates and Kirk of Scotland to the King.

1. "That all those who have been and continue excommunicate by the Kirk of Scotland, may be removed from having any access to the Court.

2. "That he would be pleased to declare, that he would by solemn Oath under his Hand and Seal, allow the National Covenant of Scotland, and the solemn League and Covenant of Scotland, England and Ireland, and that he would prosecute the ends thereof in his Royal Station.

3. "That he would ratify and approve all Acts of Parliament, enjoying the solemn League and Covenant, and establishing Presbyterian Government, the Directory of Worship, the Confession of Faith and Catechism in the Kingdom of Scotland, as they are already approved by the general Assembly of the Kirk, and by the Parliament of that Kingdom. And that he would give his Royal Assent to the Acts of Parliament, enjoying the same in the rest of his Dominions; and that he would observe the same in his own Practice and Family, and never make opposition therein, or endeavour any change thereof.

4. "That he would consent and agree, That all matters civil might be determined by the present and subsequent Parliaments of the Kingdom of Scotland, and all matters Ecclesiastical, by the ensuing general Assemblies of the Kirk, as was formerly condescended and agreed to by his late Father. After the King had heard them, he demanded whether these Papers they had delivered to him, contained all particulars which they had to propound or desire; whether they had power to recede from any particular proposed, or to be proposed, also if they had any thing to offer for the carrying on of his service against England.

To which they answered, That they had acquainted him with the utmost of their Power and Instructions.

A few days after, the Treaty began, wherein the King found many difficulties in every Article; for though that which related to the prohibiting all whom the Kirk had excommunicated from access to the Court, would deprive him of the service and attendance of the Earl of Montrose, and many other of the Loyal Nobility and Gentry of that Kingdom, he thought not fit to break with them for that, not doubting when he should have obtained the Kingdom he might by degrees make them sensible of their mistaken zeal in their acting towards such persons, and win them to a relaxation of their rigour of that injunction; But that which most prest him, was the cause of Religion expressed in the severity of those Propositions which were required of him by solemn Oath under his Hand and Seal to allow the Covenant, and to establish the Presbyterian Government, wherein they insisted so much as to deny him the use of the Liturgie to his own person; The King urged, That there was no reason why he should relinquish the Religion for which his Father had died a Martyr, and that whilst he was willing to permit to his Subjects Liberty of Conscience, it would be very inconsistent with their so earnestly pretended desires of Peace and Agreement, to deny him the same Privilege which he was so ready to give them. That the Covenant by them tendered, is the Subjects Covenant to bind them to him, and not for him to take, to swear to himself; so that he thought it sufficient to pass an Act for his People to take it. He likewise offered to confirm the Presbyterian Government in Scotland; provided that he himself might have always three Chaplains with him of his own Election.

During this Treaty, the Earl of Canworth and Mr. Murray arrived at Breda with new instructions to the Commissioners concerning the Militia, which put a further demur to the conclusion of it; and indeed it was said, The King was willing to admit of a little delay in expectation of what he might obtain from the endeavours of the Marquess of Montrose, who was after many discouragements (of which some mention shall be hereafter made) about this time embarked for Scotland, and about the midst of April landed in the Isles of Orkney, accompanied with the Lord Trendrught, the Master of Pitsfodder, Sir John Urry, Henry Graham (his natural Brother,) Colonel Johnson, George Drummond of Ballach, and other persons his Friends and Confederates, with two Ships and a small Frigate of 14 Guns, 1500 Arms, and 500 German Souldiers; Colonel King had promised to come up to him with some Horse from Sweden, but did not do it; Colonel Ogleby, and Colonel Cockrain, who were trusted with certain sums of Money for the raising of men and arms, (the one in Amsterdam, and the other in Poland) fail'd in their duty, and converted the money to their own use; and two of four Ships which he had, (wherein were about 200 German Souldiers, and many Implements of War) were cast away upon the Rocks a little before his landing; but these disasters which might have shaken a great resolution, abated nothing of his Courage and Magnanimity.

The Estates of Scotland had no Forces in any of these Islands, whereby he had a good opportunity to raise men to form a little Army for his landing on the Main: the people were raw and undisciplin'd, much fallen from that Courage for which the ancient Inhabitants of these Isles have been fam'd; but nevertheless, he was forc'd to make as good a shift as he could with them; and whilst he was busied here in his Levies, the Laird of Pluscardy endeavoured to raise two thousand Men for his assistance in the Earl of Seaforth's Territories.

The Earl of Canworth and Mr. Murray arrive at Breda, with further instructions to the Scots Commissioners. Montrose lands with Forces in Scotland.

And now having got together as many Souldiers as he desired of this sort, hee left Colonel Johnson and Henry Graham to keep Kirkwall in Pomona, the chief Isle of the Orcades, and transplanted all the rest of his men to Cathnes, which is the utmost point of Land in the Northwest part of Scotland; here he hoped to meet Pluscardy, with the two thousand men he promised to raise, but they came not; for the Parliament of Scotland was so vigilant, that they sent into most places where they thought he had any correspondence to prevent the getting men together for him; and very suddenly after the News of his arrival was known, an Army of seven thousand Foot, and thirty Troops of Horse was sent to oppose him. The Horse were commanded by David Lesley, and the Foot by Major General Holborn, of these they sent three hundred in the Van under the command of Colonel Straughan consisting of his own Troop, and three Troops more commanded by Colonel Montgomery, Colonel Ker, and Lieutenant Colonel Hacket, and indeed there needed no other Army; for all that Montrose was able to do at that time towards the strengthening himself, was little or nothing more than the taking of Dunbeth-House, which was soon surrendered to Colonel Urry upon demand, the Lord thereof being fled to Edenburgh: The Earl of Sunderland was a sore Remora in his way; for though he had not force enough to encounter the Marquess, yet the power and sway he bore in all those adjacent parts about where Montrose had to do, both kept back the Countrey from coming in to him, and hindred several of the Gentry from appearing, who otherwise were inclinable enough to have given their assistance; so that Straughan surprising the Montrosians with the speed and unexpectedness of his appearance, and finding them much disorder'd and tir'd with seeking to recover a certain Pass, (which they fail'd of obtaining,) improved his advantage, and after some repulse at first, redoubled with such fury upon them, that the unseason'd Orkney men immediately yielded themselves, and in a short time (though not without much resolution shewn in their resistance) the Germans also. Thus was Montrose his vigorous and loyal undertaking for his Sovereigns service, the labour of much time, and carried on with incredible pains, difficulty and danger, dissipated in a moment by a Party far inferior in number, and doubtless no whit superior in skilful and valiant Leaders (not to mention Montrose, who was accounted, and worthily, the greatest Captain of his Age:) such was the misfortune of this at least bravely attempted enterprise, occasioned chiefly from the great disadvantage wherein Montrose his men were set upon; and their necessities and despair of succours and supplies in a Countrey surrounded with Enemies, or perhaps from a kind of surprisal or pannick fear among the generality of the Common Souldiers, upon an apprehension that Lesley's great Army had been come up against them: However it were, so great was the defeat, that of the whole Body of the Montrosians who engaged in this Battle, there escaped not above an hundred from being either taken or slain: Among the prisoners were Sir John Urry, Major General of Montrose's his Army, the Lord Fendraught, Sir Francis Hay of Dalgetie, Colonel Hay of Noughton, Colonel defeated by Straughan

Grey, Lieutenant Colonel Stuart, with other considerable Officers: Montrose himself made a shift to escape for the present, by quitting his Horse, together with his Belt and his Coat with the Star, and shifting himself into an ordinary Highlanders Apparel. In this Fight the Royal Standard was taken, upon which was portraicted the Head of the late King lying a bleeding, and severed from the Body, and this following Motto, Judge and revenge my Cause, O Lord. And the Lord Pisfoder's Son who was Standard-bearer was slain, Colonel Straughan received a shot upon his Belly, but in regard it lighted upon the double of his Belt and Buff-Coat, he had no harm thereby.

So welcome was the News of this Victory to the State and Kirk of Scotland, that they bestowed as a reward upon Straughan a thousand pounds Sterling, and a Chain of Gold: upon Lieutenant Colonel Hacket a thousand Mark Sterling. But that which crowned this Victory to them with the highest joy and satisfaction, was the getting of Montrose his person into their Power: as indeed it was impossible for him to make his escape, so narrowly was he way-laid all the Countrey round, and so strict a search and enquiry was ordered to be sent after him, besides a large reward promised to whomsoever should be his apprehender: yet for the space of three or four dayes he kept himself undiscovered, by wandring up and down in the open Fields with one Associate only in his misery, till being very near famished with hunger, it was his fortune in the end to fall into the hands of the Laird of Aston, a person who had formerly adhered to the Marquess, and had been befriended by him, and of whom upon that consideration, he doubtless hoped for the favour of not being discovered by him, if not of assistance towards his concealment: But Aston, for fear of what he must have suffered if he had been known to have concealed him, or for want of opportunity, in regard of his Followers that attended him, or setting his thoughts upon the proposed reward (as the regard of gain, for the most part outballances that of friendship) was not to be perswaded or induced by any respect of old Friendship or Relation to suffer him to escape; so that being seized and secured by a strong Guard, (and having in vain supplicated for death by the hands of those that took him) he was presently sent and delivered up to the Custody of David Lesley, and by him hurried away with all speed to Edenburgh, where he was much insulted over in the several places he came through, onely the people of Dundee, (though none more endamaged by his Souldiers in the former War) were very civil to him, furnish'd him with all things necessary, and were so far from insulting, that they very much commiserated his condition: the chief favour he obtained in his journey, was the permission to call in, as he came along, at the house of his Father-in-law, the Earl of Southesk, to see two Children of his that were there. At Leith he was met by the Magistrates of Edenburgh in a kind of fatal pomp; and as it were to welcome him to the satisfaction of their revenge, he had the reproachful Honour, while the rest of the Prisoners went by him on foot, to be mounted on a Cart-horse (for the better advantage of exposing him to the gazing and scorn of the people: till

He is taken Prisoner.

Brought
to Edenburgh.

1650 till he came to the end of the Canon-Gate-Street, where the Executioner in his Livery-Coat, and several other Officers, attended with a Cart, having a high Chair placed in it like a sella Curulis, wherein (though he himself the Captive fast bound and bare-headed, while the Executioner had his Bonnet on) he rode as in a Triumphal Chariot, the disgrace which his Enemies intended him, turning to his Honour, by representing the Heroick Magnanimity of his Nature, which could not chuse but triumph in the midst of Captivity. In this manner reproached of many, (as it is usual when men are in adversity) pitied of others, even some of them who were engaged in the general enmity against his designs, whom yet the Majesty of his presence, and the undisturbed patience and constancy wherewith he demeaned himself, melted into a sensibility of the misery of his condition. He was conveyed to the Tolbooth the place of his Imprisonment, where the next day being Sunday the nineteenth of May, he received new matter for the tryal of his patience, by the troublesome visits of divers of the Ministry and Parliament, who, while they began to persecute him with their pretended Exhortations, which served but to aggravate the sense of his affliction, he told them, that whereas they thought they had affronted him the day before by carrying him in a Cart, he esteemed it the most Honourable and joyful Cavalcade that ever he made; God having all the while most comfortably manifested his presence to him, and furnished him with resolution to overlook the reproaches of men, and to behold him for whose Cause he suffered. The next day being summoned to appear before the Lords, Barons, and Burgeesses assembled in Parliament, he came into the House apparelled in a very rich suit, thick overlaid with costly Lace, and over it a Scarlet Rocket, and on his Head a Beaver Hat with a very rich Hat-band upon it, with Carnation Silk Stockings, Garters and Roses, with other Habiliments suitable, all which he had caused to be made for him immediately upon his coming to Edenburgh, as if he had been going rather about some Festival than Tragical Affair. As soon as he was brought to the Barr of the House, the Lord Chancellour (who according to the custome of that Kingdom is alwayes Speaker) told him first, That he must kneel at the Barr. Whereunto he answered, My Lord, I shall with all my heart observe any posture you shall appoint me to appear before you in, whereby I may manifest to you, that I freely submit to the Authority of Parliament, and to this present Parliament in a more especial manner, because you have concluded so near a conjunction with his present Majesty my Master in the late Treaty. Then the Chancellour made a Speech to him, the substance whereof was this.

S I R,

The Lord Chancellours Speech to him. I am commanded to mind you of the last judgement of God befallen you for your perfidious breaking of the Covenant, which might justly provoke God thus to divert your Counsels and Affairs, for having been so eminent an Author and Actor of mischief against this Nation; you abandoned the Covenant, and despised the Oath of God, and did invade your Native Countrey, and with most inbumane and barbarous cruelty did burn and waste divers parts thereof, and have spilt much Blood of his Majesties good Subjects, taking advantage of that time, when the prime Commanders and Forces thereof were employed elsewhere. For these Crimes you were excommunicated by the Church, and fore-faulted by the Parliament of this Kingdom, and yet still continued in the highest contempt against God, under that fearful Sentence of Excommunication: and to this day have you remained without the smallest shew of Repentance. And God by his Providence hath now justly brought you hither to receive the Sentence of your Condemnation.

Hereupon Montrose humbly desiring to know of his Lordship, whether it were the Parliaments pleasure that he might be permitted to speak what he had to say for himself, and humbly craving that liberty from them, he was told by the Chancellour, that the Estates in Parliament did give him free liberty to speak what he could say for himself. Then Montrose.

My Lord, said he,

"I am glad that I may have liberty to answer His An^d for my self, though I am here your Prisoner, yet swer.
"my Cause is good, nor is there any breach of "the Covenant on my part, in which I swore to "be true to his Majesty, his Heirs and Successors.
"Concerning what I have acted in relation to the "Wars and Affairs of this Kingdom, I had not "only a general Commission, but particular Orders for what I have done from His Majesty,
"which I was engaged to obey by the said Covenant. And concerning my coming over now,
"I was ascertained that you had professed to comply with his Majesty in the present Affairs, in "which he hath employed me; and upon that account it was that I have acted. I desire to refer
"my self, and do submit unto this present Parliament, and the Authority thereof, to be my "Judges in this case, whom I own as a true Parliament by Authority from his Majesty, and I "shall be content, however it shall please God to "deal with me. As for my life, if you take it away
"by this Authority, it is well known unto all the "world, that I regard it not: Death is a Debt
"which all owe, and must once be paid by every "one: And I shall be willing and much rejoyce
"to go the same way which my Master went before me, and it is the joy of my heart not only
"to do, but also to suffer for him.

Moreover, he added to this effect, "That he "appeared before them with so much the greater "respect and reverence, by reason of the agreement he heard they had made with his Majesty,
"that he was never engaged in the League and "Covenant, and therefore was not justly to be "condemned for opposing it, since he was sensible of how sad consequence it had proved to "these distressed Kingdoms, and the welfare of "his late Majesty, against whom those that rose "up in Arms in England were plainly assisted "and upheld by a faction of this Kingdom: that
"as he had never been the occasion of shedding
"Blood but in Battel, and by the necessity of "War, so he had been ever careful to prevent all "disorders as much as could be, and to save as "many lives as possibly lay in his power. That "what

1650 "whatever he had acted formerly against them
 "to make a diversion of those Forces that were "going from thence against his late Majesty, was "merely in obedience and zeal to his Majesties
 "service, at whose Command he as readily sub"mitted to lay down his Arms and retreat, as he "had before cheerfully taken them up in his Ma"jesties defence. That as for his coming in at "that time, it was in order to the accelerating of "the Treaty betwixt his present Majesty and
 "them, to the end that his Majesty being not dri"ven to rely wholly upon their assistance, might "be enabled to make the better Conditions with "them. That since he had done nothing but "what became a good Christian, a good Subject,
 "and a good Neighbour, he desired them not "to be rash and partial in their Judgement, but to "judge him according to the Laws of God, of "Nature, of Nations, and of the Land, as they "would answer the contrary to the righteous
 "Judge of the World.

After he had been thus examined and tried, he was commanded to withdraw; the Parliament were not very long debating the matter, ere they unanimously resolved to proceed to Sentence of Condemnation; which, (he being called in again) was denounced against him in this Form.

The Sentence pronounced against him by the Parliament.

You are to be carried back to the place from whence you came, and from thence you are to morrow, being the One and twentieth day of May, 1650. to be carried to Edinburgh-Cross, and there to be hanged upon a Gallows thirty Foot high, for the space of three Hours, and then to be taken down, and your Head to be cut off upon the Scaffold, and hanged on Edinburgh-Tolbooth, and your Legs and Arms to be hanged up in other publick Towns in this Kingdom, and your Body to be buried at the place where you shall be executed, except the Kirk shall take off your Excommunication, then your Body shall be buried at the common place of Burial.

After the denouncing of the Sentence, at which he altered not his countenance, or seemed in the least manner to be moved, he was again guarded back to Prison, where being again haunted and importuned by the Ministers, he expressed how much he was beholding to the Parliament for the honour they had put upon him; for that he accounted it a greater honour to have his Head stand upon the Prison-Gate for this Quarrel, than to have his Picture in the Kings Bed-Chamber; and lest his Loyalty should be forgotten, they had highly honoured him in designing lasting Monuments to four of the chiefeſt Cities to bear up his Memorial to all Posterity, wishing he had had Flesh enough to have sent a piece to every City in Christendome to witness his Loyalty to his King and Countrey.

He is brought to Execution and hanged upon a Gallows
 30 Foot high.

The next day being the One and twentieth day of May, the day appointed for his Tragedy, he was led forth to his Execution, at which time, so winning was his deportment, and his Speeches so powerful, that they made a very great impression upon the Spirits of the people, inſomuch as some who observed the passages of his Death, were of opinion, That he had drawn away more more from the Kirk-party by his manner of dying, than he could have vanquished in the Field by force of Arms.

Upon the Scaffold he delivered his mind to the people in this following Speech:

"I am sorry if this manner of my Death be His "scandalous to any good Christian. Doth it not Speech.
 "often happen to the Righteous according to the "wayes of the Wicked, and to the Wicked ac"cording to the ways of the Righteous? doth not
 "sometimes a just Man perish in his righte"ousness, and a wicked Man prosper in his malice?
 "they who know me, should not disesteem me
 "for this; many greater than I have been dealt "with in this kind, yet I must not say, but that "all Gods Judgements are just; for my private "sins, I acknowledge this to be just with God, I "submit my self to him; but in regard of man, I "may say they are but Instruments: God forgive "them, I forgive them; they have oppressed the "Poor, and violently perverted Judgement and "Justice; but he that is higher than they, will "reward them. What I did in this Kingdom,
 "was in obedience to the most just Commands of "my Sovereign, for his defence in the day of his
 "distress against those that rose up against him.
 "I acknowledge nothing, but fear God, and ho"nour the King, according to the Commandments
 "of God, and the Law of Nature and Nations;
 "and I have not sinned against Man, but against "God, and with him there is mercy, which is "the ground of my drawing near to him. It is "objected against me by many, even good peo"ple, that I am under the Censure of the Church,
 "this is not my fault, since it is onely for doing
 "my duty, by obeying my Princes most just com"mands, for Religion, his Person and Authority:
 "yet am I sorry they did excommunicate me,
 "and in that which is according to Gods Laws,
 "without wronging my Conscience or allegiance,
 "I desire to be relaxed; if they will not, I ap"peal to God, who is the Righteous Judge of the "World, and who must and will, I hope be my "Judge and Saviour. It is spoken of me, that I "should blame the King, God forbid; for the "late King, he lived a Saint, and died a Martyr;
 "I pray God I may so end as he did: If ever I "should wish my Soul in another mans stead, it "should be in his. For His Majesty now living,
 "never people, I believe, might be more happy in
 "a King; his commands to me were most just,
 "in nothing that he promiseth will he fail, he
 "dealeth justly with all men, I pray God he be so
 "dealt withal, that he be not betrayed under trust
 "as his Father was. I desire not to be mistaken,
 "as if my carriage to you at this time, in relation "to your ways were stubborn; I do but follow
 "the light of my own Conscience, which is se"conded by the working of the good Spirit of "God that is within me. I thank him, I go "to Heavens Throne with joy, if he enable me
 "against the fear of death, and furnish me with "courage and confidence to embrace it, even in "its most ugly shape, let God be glorified in my "end, though it were in my condemnation; yet
 "I say not this out of any fear or distrust, but out

"rity and prayers, I shall pray for you all, I leave my Soul to God, my Service to my Prince, my Good will to my Friends, and my Name and Charity to you all. And thus briefly I have exonerated my Conscience.

Having concluded his Speech, and afterwards with closed eyes and lifted up hands spent a good while in private, In pouring forth his Soul to God, and recommending his Spirit into his Hands, who was pleased (as he said) to give him a full assurance of his Mercy in Jesus Christ. He received from the Executioner a certain Cord, by which hung his Declaration and History to hang about his neck; affirming, That he thought not himself more honoured by the Garter, which honourable Order his present Majesty had been pleased to confer upon him, than by that Cord and Book, which he would embrace about his Neck with as much Joy and content as ever he did the Garter, or a Chain of Gold, adding, that if they had any more Dishonour (as they conceived it) to put upon him, he was ready to accept it. And then presently with a chearful resignation, submitted himself to the Execution of the Sentence:

Thus was this famous, but unfortunate man, sacrificed to the revenge of his Enemies after a most shameful and despicable manner, even at that very time when they were treating with the King, whom they knew full well to have a very great regard and affection for him. Together with Montrose, though not in so disgraceful a way, were executed Sir John Urry, and Colonel Spotswood Laird of Darey, (who had both the Favour to be beheaded) with some others of Note that came with the Marquess into Scotland.

The Treaty was now near a conclusion; for whatever the Kings just resentments were, his Council perswaded him to comply and accord with the Kirk in the exigence of his present condition: and as for the Militia, he offered to confirm it in the Hands of the Estates for five years: but whilst matters were in this nearness of composition, news was brought of the defeat and execution of Montrose, which much surprised the King, considering the time of doing it; and though he omitted not in an express by Mr. Murray to manifest his great dislike of the Action; (for he was much afflicted at it) yet he was prevail'd on with much regret not to urge it so far as to a rupture; He told them in his Letter,

The Kings Letter to the Scots about their severe proceedings against Montrose and others

"That he was very sorrowful and grieved to hear a report which came to him by credible Persons, that notwithstanding those hopeful overtures lately made between him and them, tending to their Peace: Yet that there hath been some Blood shed of his good Subjects of the Kingdom of Scotland, and that the manner and result thereof according to the report he had heard of it did very much trouble him; but that he might know the particulars more certainly, he desired to understand the business fully from themselves, of whom he required an account.

A while after, the Treaty being ended to the satisfaction of the Estates, They sent a solemn Message to invite him to Scotland, and in answer to what he writ about Montrose, they besought him Not to stumble at it, assuring him that there was nothing in what they did, but to accomplish his ends, and to serve his Interests to the best Advantage. They likewise requested him, To make all possible speed in coming to them, protesting they would with their Lives and Fortunes assist to establish him in the Throne of his Kingdoms.

The rigorous Prosecution of Montrose in that violent manner, was chiefly from the instigation of the Kirk, who at that time had great Authority, and did so much influence the People, that it was almost impossible to appease the storm they raised against him. He had been excommunicated long before, and in that Church, Excommunication is so terrible, that few will have any manner of conversation with a person excommunicated; and the generality of the people, when they see a man whom their Ministers declare to be excluded from Heaven, are easily induced to think him unworthy to live on Earth. Many, if not the greater part of those that pursued his life, were earnest for the admission of the King, but so much did their Zeal exceed their Discretion, and so strongly were they intoxicated with the Covenant, and seduced by the Inventors and Assertors of it, that they believed neither their Laws nor Religion in safety whilst he lived.

The King upon the Message sent to him, prepared for his journey to Scotland, and about the beginning of June took Shipping at Scheveline in Holland, and after a happy evasion of double danger that threatned him in his Voyage, one from a sudden storm which arose and cast him upon certain Danish Islands, (yet without any loss or shipwreck, but on the other side much respect and civil usage from the Inhabitants;) the other from a Fleet of Parliament-Vessels, which were sent out under Popham to intercept his passage, he landed safe at a place called the Spey in the North of Scotland. The Estates and Parliament of Scotland in the mean time employed their consultations about the forming of an Army for the service of the King, as they pretended, and an Act was published for the rating of every fourth man through the Kingdom, who was capable to bear Arms: The Earl of Leven was made General of the Foot, and Holborn Major General, David Lesley Lieutenant General of the Horse, and Montgomery Major General. the supreme command of the whole Army being reserved for the King himself, whom at his first Arrival they entertained with high Complements, and much Acclamation, and seemed to congratulate his coming with great demonstrations of joy and affection: and on the fifteenth of July they again solemnly proclaim'd him King at Edinburgh Cross, and had design'd (had not certain obstacles come in the way) to have crowned him the following Month: but he had not been long among them, ere they began to discover their native Rigour, imperiously to take upon them according to their usual manner of Kirk-Authority and Discipline, and to obtrude upon the King such curbing conditions, as but very ill suited with Regal Dignity.

He is proclaimed King at Edinburgh Cross.

1650

And not long after when the City of Aberdeen presented him with Five hundred pounds Sterling, the Committee of Estates seemed displeased thereat; and lest other Cities and Towns should in the like manner testify their Duties to him, they declared, That what Money or Plate any had a purpose to bestow on the King, should be brought into the Publick Treasury; and in conformity to this dealing towards him, they proceeded to reform (as they called it) his Retinue, interdicting all whom they styled Malignants (which were most of his faithfullest Servants) from all employment both about his person and in the Army.

The Commonwealth of England send an Army against Scotland

The Commonwealth of England had sufficient Intelligence from the beginning of all these Occurrences, and of the Engagement of the Scots to establish the King in the Thrones of all his Dominions, and that they might not be surprized by them, they drew many Troops and Regiments together, and formed an Army which they sent to the Borders of Scotland.

Cromwell is made General of the Parliaments Forces in stead of Fairfax.

The Scots raise an Army.

Fairfax, who was to command this Army, refused to accept the charge, notwithstanding that they offered him a Commission with larger power than that by which he had formerly commanded their Armies, excusing his refusal by reason of great indisposition of health occasioned by his wounds and other incommodities of the late War. Upon this, Cromwell, who was newly returned from Ireland (where he had been very victorious) had the Chief Command of the Army conferred upon him, which he (after some little formal shew of denial) accepted of, and about the later end of June he marched towards Berwick in order to his advance into Scotland. The Scots whilst this preparation was making, sent many expostulatory Letters to Sir Arthur Hazlerig then at Newcastle, urging the breach of Covenant and the Union between the two Nations, which availed nothing; yet they did not neglect the raising an Army for their defence, for matters were at this time grown to a greater height than to be decided by the Pen.

Cromwell upon repair to the Borders, published a Declaration in the name of the Parliament of England to justify their proceedings in this manner towards the Scots, and to reproach a perverted part of them for that breach of the Union betwixt the two Nations, which they imputed to the English, (for they would not lay the blame of their imputations on the whole Nation) but so great was the affection of the generality of the people of Scotland towards the King, that this Declaration made little impression on them, though some privately kept intelligence with Cromwell, to the ruine of themselves and their Countrey.

About the end of July the English Army to the number of sixteen thousand effective, Officers and Souldiers, marched into Scotland, and came after little resistance (in the defence of some Passes) to Mordington; most of the Scots who inhabited the Borders had left their habitations, which put the Army into more streights for subsistence than they expected, but a Fleet of English Ships waited on their motions on the coasts of Scotland, yet Cromwell pretending to commiserate the condition of the Scotch people, set forth a Declaration, promising Protection of their persons and goods to all that would return to their Dwellings, with a strict prohibition on pain of death to any of the Souldiers to molest or do them any harm, or take from them any Victuals or other necessities without full recompance in money for the same.

From Mordington the English Army marched to Haddington, and the Scotch Army lay encamped betwixt Edinburgh and Leith, consisting of six thousand Horse and Dragoons, and fifteen thousand Foot; Cromwell marched from Haddington, and came in view of the Scotch Army, where he observed them to be too strongly entrenched to be forced, and after he had fac'd them a day and a night without being able to draw them from their entrenchments, he marched away towards Musleburgh: The Scots upon this retreat drew out all their Horse, and fell into the Rear of the English Army, which was commanded by Lambert, and made so brisk a Charge, that Lambert himself was wounded, and like to have been taken Prisoner, but Cromwell came to his relief, and drove them back to their Camp, not without some loss. The next day betwixt three and four in the morning fifteen Coronets of the Scotch Horse commanded by Major General Montgomery and Col. Straughan, came out of their Line with design to beat up the Quarters of the English about Musleburgh, they surprized the out-Guards, and routed the first Regiment that appeared to oppose them, and advanced to another Body, which was drawn together to succour the others; but there they met with so great resistance, that Montgomery was wounded, and the whole Party put to great disorder and confusion, and pursued to their Army, and the Camp had been in danger of surprisal, had not the King himself (appearing unexpectedly amongst them) opposed the hazard of his Person, and the Authority of his Name against their precipitated flight. Of the Scots in this Engagement seventy four were taken Prisoners and many slain, and Straughan himself was once taken, but got off again.

The Scots routed at Musleburgh.

The pretended Parliament at Westminster were no less active there than Cromwell was in Scotland to carry on the designs and interest of the Republicque, proceeding with all imaginable rigour against all persons that they could discover in any manner acting against their tyrannous Usurpation. And about this time one Doctor Levens, a Doctor of the Civil Law being apprehended with some Commissions of the Kings, which he had intention to disperse for his Service, was therefore arraigned at a Court-Marshal, and condemned and executed by hanging by the neck till he died, on the thirteenth day of July, over against the Royal Exchange in London.

Dr. Levens hanged over against the Royal Exchange for his Loyalty.

But in further manifestation of their Impiety, they were not contented to have inhumanely murdered the King, and seized on, and disposed of all his Goods and Revenues, but they insulted over those Statues which his Vertues had caused to be set up in the Royal Exchange, and the West end of St. Pauls Church; the first of these they ridiculously (in imitation of their barbarous cruelty) decollated, and Ordered it to be taken out of the Nich, and under the Basis thereof these words

The Kings Statues destroyed by Order of Parliament.

1650 words were written, Exit Tyrannus Regum ultimus, Anno Libertatis Angliæ restitutæ primo, Annoque Domini 1648. which remained many years a testimony of their guilt, and a memorial to strangers of their bold-fac'd Treason, which gave not only Truth, but even Time it self the lye: for never was there such a thing as the first year of the peoples Liberty under their Anarchical Usurpation. The other Statue of the King being thrown from the place where it stood, fell upon its feet, which was then taken by many as a presage that his glorious Memory, Fame, and Posterity should recover and continue, maugre all the designs and contrivements of his and their implacable Enemies.

In Ireland the Kings affairs prospered very ill, insomuch that in five or six weeks time the Parliamentarians had taken Waterford, Duncannon, Caterloe and Charlemont, and had great hopes of a plenary Conquest of that Country.

The Battle at Dunbar.

The Scotch and English Armies lying near one another without Engagement (because of the advantageous posture in which the Scots Troops were placed, having a great Hill for their security on one side, and a River and the City of Edinburgh on the other) Cromwell's Army began to be distressed by scarcity of provisions, which made him retreat to Pentland Hills, and thence with some difficulty (by reason of bad weather) to Musleburgh to be near the Sea to have supply of Victuals from the English Fleet that attended him: and after a few days stay there, he marched to Dunbar on Sunday the first of September with intention to ship his Foot much wearied by sickness and long marches, and march away with his Horse into England; but the Scotch having intelligence thereof, pressed so hard upon him with their Army that he could not effect his purpose; and the same day at night that he arrived at Dunbar, the Scots being close at his Heels, drew up their whole Army (consisting of between twenty and four and twenty thousand men) upon a high Hill, within a mile of the Town; the English exceeding not the number of twelve thousand, drew out in Battalia in a Corn-field near adjoining, having a neck of Land to encamp on, whose breadth was not a mile and a half from Sea to Sea. The next morning being the second of September, early in the morning David Lesly Lieutenant General of the Scotch Army drew down his men to the Foot of the Hill, and about four in the afternoon his Train of Artillery followed to the side of a great Ditch, which divided the two Armies. The English that Evening ranged themselves close to the Ditch, and placed their Field-pieces in the most useful manner they could, to be ready to secure their Regiments, and annoy the Enemy if they should assail them in the night, and finding the Pass at Copperspeth between Dunbar and Berwick very necessary to them both for the security of their march homeward, and their more easie advance to the Scotch. On Tuesday at four in the morning they attempted with three Regiments of Horse and two of Foot to possess themselves thereof; this gave the Scots an hot Alarm, and a fierce dispute hapned, so that both Armies became engaged. The English word was The Lord of Hosts; theirs, The Covenant.

The Scotch Right Wing of Horse which were

most of them Launceers, made a very bold charge and put the English Horse to a little confusion, but they immediately rallied, and were so seconded by their foot, that by six in the morning the Right Wing of the Scotch Horse was routed, and the left without striking a stroke ran away, and the Foot seeing this rout and flight of their horse, and not able in any order by reason thereof to engage (without any resistance) threw down their Arms and fled, giving the English the full pursuit of them eight miles beyond Haddington. The Scots were so presumptuous the day before as to send to Edinburgh to assure their friends of a certain Victory over the English, and it was reported that some of the Ministers declared it in their Sermons as the mind of God to have them delivered up into their hands; but in the midst of this confidence they found themselves miserably frustrated, and their despairing and despised Enemy a Conqueror. The number of the Scotch slain in this Battel were reckoned to be four thousand, and nine thousand were taken Prisoners with all their Ammunition, Bag and Baggage, and ten thousand Arms. The Officers and Prisoners of most note were Sir James Lumsdale, next Commander in Quality to David Lesly, the Laird of Liberton, Adjutant General Bicherton, Scout-Master-General Campbel, Sir William Douglas, and Colonel Gordon, twelve Lieutenant-Colonels, six Majors, forty two Captains, seventy five Lieutenants, seventeen Cornets, two Quarter-masters, an hundred and ten Ensign-bearers, and two hundred Horse and Foot colours, with seven and twenty great Guns; and all this obtained with the loss of not above three hundred English Souldiers, and one Officer (Major Rookesby) who survived the Battel, but died afterwards of his wounds.

The Scots after this days loss quitted Leith and Edinburgh, whereof the next day Cromwell took possession, and the King retired to St. Johnston, where the Committee of Estates were assembled. The defeat of the Scotch Army produced not those effects as the King expected upon the Ruling part of the Nobility and Clergy of the Kingdom; for instead of enlarging their interest, by taking into their conjunction those whose help they had before rejected for their affection to their King, they ascribed the overthrow of the Army to the admitting of him into Scotland before he had given full satisfaction to the Kirk in what they required of him; and in prosecution of these Counsels, they began very much to impose upon him, and remove from his person the most faithful and Loyal of his servants.

The King could not brook this insolent carriage toward him, and therefore resolved at any hazard to free himself from the trouble of it, and by advice of some few of his best and most trusty friends, he took Horse one morning, with three of them in his company, pretending to ride out a little way a Hawking, and rode directly to the Lord Dedups house near Dundee, where he was receiv'd by some of his Loyal Subjects and Servants, with whom he kept intelligence, and from hence he intended to have gone further North, where he heard the Marquess of Huntly, the Earls of Arbuthnot and Seaforth, and the Lord Ogleby and New-

1650 Newburgh, and Major General Middleton, with the Gordons and the men of Atholl, were ready to appear for him with no contemptible force, but he staid till by an express sent to them he should be inform'd of the certainty of their condition.

This secret and sudden departure of the King did much perplex the Committee of Estates, who were very apprehensive of the consequence of his joyning with the Gordons and the Atholl men, and hearing he was gone to the Lord Deddys House, they resolved to send Major General Montgomery with a party of Horse to perswade his return to them (many of the Chiefs of the Noblemen and Ministers being by this time sensible that these breaches and divisions would but give the English (then in the bowels of their Country) greater advantage against them, and that nothing could save the whole from ruine, but a general uniting of all parties under the King against the common Enemy.) Montgomery arriving at the House, sent in to the King to acquaint him that he came thither by order of the Committee of Estates, humbly to entreat him to come back to St. Johnstons, and being admitted to his presence, he fell at his feet, beseeching him to forget what ever had been hitherto committed derogatory to his Royal Authority, assuring him that he should hereafter be observed with all imaginable duty and respect. The King having heard this Message, considered with his friends what to do thereupon, and though he could not easily forget the impositions and restraints he had so lately endured, being persuaded by their advice, that his return might be a means to unite all interests to him; and being assured by Montgomery of the reality of those at St. Johnstons to his service, he condescended to return with him thither, to the general joy of the moderate of all parties as well Covenanters as Royalists; yet he wanted not at the same time an assurance from the Gordons and the rest in the North, to secure him against the Kirk and all their adherents that should oppose his Authority.

Divers of the Royal Nobility received into the favour of this Assembly.

The Committee of Estates were much more compliant with the King at his return than before, and having summoned a general meeting to be held at St. Johnstons consisting of the King, Lords, Barons and Burgeses, to consult for the good of the Kirk, King and Kingdom; together with the Commissioners of the Kirk then at Sterlin to adjourn their sitting thither; They applied themselves to compose all differences amongst dissenters, of which the most formidable were, Huntly, Middleton, and those in the North; but after a while, by the prudence of this assembly, and the good advice of the moderate Clergy, all was concluded; and the Duke of Hamilton, the Marquess of Huntly, and the Earls of Lythgow, Lauderdale, Calendar, and Craford, Lyndsey, and the Lords Buchan, Deddys, and Middleton of the Scots, with many other were received into favour and promise of employment in the Army; and of the English, The Earl of Cleveland, the Lord Wentworth, the Lord Wilmot, and some few other Royalists were continued about the King; for before, none of that Nation but the Duke of Buckingham, Massey, Graves and Titus, were permitted near his Person.

Whilst these matters were agitated betwixt the King and the Committee of Estates at St. Johnstons, Cromwell was not idle, he had begun to fortifie Leith, and laid a close siege to Edinburgh Castle, and on the fourteenth of September he marched to Luthgow, and from thence to Falkirk within a mile of Sterlin, (near which place the main of the Kings Army lay) and sent a summons to the Town, but was resolutely denied by the Governor, and he returned back to Luthgow, where General Deane came to him from England with recruits of men and supplies of all sorts of provisions: But since he could not effect any thing against Sterlin, he resolved to try what might be done in the West of Scotland, and in October he marched to Glasgow, upon intelligence that Major General Montgomery was ordered by the King to march into those parts, to secure that County which was then wavering in their allegiance. In this expedition he hoped to prevail very much either by subduing Ker and Straughan (who lay in those parts) to his power, or gaining them to his party; which was a design he had long before projected, and so far by his insinuations proceeded in it, that Mr. John Guthrie, Mr. Patrick Gillespy, and Mr. Rutherford Ministers, with many others of that order withdrew from the Assembly at St. Johnstons, and in print remonstrated in the name of themselves and the Western Churches against the present proceedings, and the admission of Malignants (such they call'd the Kings best Subjects) to power and employment; And with these Ker, Straughan, the Laird of Warreston, Sir John Chiesly, and Sir James Stuart, and others confederated.

The dissatisfied Ministers remonstrate against the proceedings of the Estates at St. Johnstons.

The Estates and Commissioners of the Kirk at St. Johnstons resented much this Remonstrance and the defection of the Ministers, but no means they could then use was of force to reconcile them; insomuch, that the division of publick Resolutioners and Remonstrators (for by those names they were distinguished) continued in that Kingdom with much animosity till the year 1660. that the King was restored to the full exercise of his Authority, though the cause thereof (which was the joyning all interest to oppose the invasion of a foreign Army) had long ceased, but by that occasion Cromwells Conquest was made very easie, and his fomenting that rent in their Church, made their subjection to his authority more lasting than otherwise it would have been.

The King was desirous to compose this disorder, or at least to prevent the dividing so great a force as was under Ker and Straughan from his service; and to that end, the Earl of Cassels and the Lord Broody, and Mr. Robert Douglass the Minister, were sent to treat with them; but they were somewhat averse to a composure, yet they declared against any conjunction with Cromwell, professing equally against Malignants and Sectaries: nevertheless, Ker upon information that Straughan held intelligence with Cromwell, was at length so far induced to comply, that he took him

1650 him Prisoner, and sent him to Dunbarton Castle, from whence he was afterwards removed to Cathness; but after a while by the negligence or connivence of his Keepers he escaped to Edinburgh to the English.

Col. Ker defeated, and taken Prisoner
by Major General
Lambert.

Cromwell, whilst he was at Glasgow, had intelligence that the Kings Army intended to relieve Edinburgh Castle, which made him return thither, and leave Major Gen. Lambert with a good Brigade to make impression in the Western parts. He after some inquiry discovered a Ford over Hamilton River, over which on the last of November he marched his Souldiers; Ker had intelligence of this, and at a Town of that name, he resolutely fell into Lambert's quarters, but the English Horse had so soon the alarm, that they drew together, and so well received his Charge, that a hundred of the Scots were kill'd, and the rest routed and pursued as far as Ayr; and Ker himself (having his right hand almost cut off) was taken Prisoner.

Lambert left Colonel Whally with some Troops at Ayr, to command in those Western parts, and return'd himself to the gross of the Army.

The rising in Norfolk for the King suppressed. In England some attempts were made for the Kings service, but without success, and particularly in Norfolk; many Gentlemen and others were drawn together, but before they could be form'd into Troops, they were surpris'd and suppressed by two Troops from Lyn, and some Forces of the Militia of the County joyned with them, and twenty of them being afterward found guilty by an illegal High Court of Justice, were sentenced to death, and executed thereupon.

Edinburgh Castle had been besieged some months with little loss on either side, and Derbyshire Miners were brought out of England to undermine it, who carried on the Work sixty foot, but the Rock was so hard they could work no further.

Edinburgh Castle surrendered to Cromwell. The Governour was one Dundas, a Son-in-Law of old Leven, who was so practis'd on by Cromwell, that he surrendred the Castle on the 24th of December upon the ensuing conditions:

1. The Castle be surrendred to Cromwell with all the Ordnance, Arms, Magazine and Furniture of War.

2. The Governour and all the Officers and Souldiers to march out with Colours displayed; Drum beating, Match lighted, and Bullet in Mouth, and to be conveyed to what place they should desire, and every Souldier to have what Baggage he could carry.

3. The Publick Moveables, Records, Writs and Evidences to be removed to Sterlin, or to Fife.

4. Proclamation to be made, that all that had Goods in the Castle, might come or send to own and receive them.

5. All sick or wounded Officers and Souldiers to have liberty to stay in Edinburgh.

6. Horses and Waggon or other Carriage to be provided for the Governour and the Officers for their convenience of Travel.

7. Hostages to be given mutually for the performances of the Conditions.

The King and the Committee of Estates were much troubled at the News of this loss, and the more, because thereby they perceived, that what the force of their Enemies could not gain from them, their own divisions, and the perfidious treachery of false Friends would deprive them of. There were found in the Castle five French Cannon, nine Dutch Demi-Cannon, two Culverins, two Demi-Culverins, two Minions, two Faucons, eight and twenty brass Drakes, two Petards, eight thousand Arms, near eighty Barrels of Powder, and a proportionable store of Cannon-shot, with good store of Oatmeal, Butter, fresh Water, Beef and Pork.

The Master-gunner reported, that when the Guns were drawing to the Batteries, he had so planted his Pieces, that those of the Enemy could not have been planted but with great loss of men in the action; but when he prepared to give fire, he was forbidden so to do by the Governour, on pain of death.

Abernethy his Confident went often out of the Castle, on pretence to get intelligence, but the business was to make a bargain with Cromwell for the Castle, and when it was surrendred, he staid at Edinburgh, and was ever after a promoter of the Designs of the English for the Conquest and enslaving of his Native Countrey.

After the loss of Edinburgh Castle, all the Forts on this side of Sterlin were taken by the English, so that those of the Scots that were loyal to the King, applied themselves with all diligence to raise what Forces they could to complete an Army; and that his Authority might have the greater strength and reverence of the People, they immediately proceeded to his Coronation; which was on the first of January solemnized at Scoon, a few miles distant from St. Johnstons (the accustomed place for Coronation of the Kings of Scotland); the King being the forty eighth Monarch of that Kingdom there crowned.

The King
solemnly crowned at Scoon.

It was celebrated with loud Acclamations, Bonfires, shooting off of Guns, and with as much pomp and ceremony as the present state of things would permit. The Nobility, Barons and Burgeses went from St. Johnstons to Scoon in their Robes, bringing thither with them the Crown, Sword, and Scepter; (the whole Scotch Army, which stood all the way as a Guard between those two places, making a Lane for them as they went along. In the Presence-Chamber, (where the Lord of Angus attended as Lord Chamberlain for that day,) was plac'd a Chair of State, where the King sat with all his Lords and Attendants about him: after a low obeysance made to him by all the Company, the Marquess of Argyle made a Speech.

Wherein he declared the Affections of the Parliament, Assembly, and People to him, and of their hopes of good from him, to make them happy, in bringing England and all their Enemies in subjection to him and them. Moreover he added, That the Parliament of Scotland were come to present His Majesty with the Crown, Sword and Scepter.

Then he was attended by all his Train marching in Order before him to the Kirk of Scoon, where in the midst of a large Stage of Four and twenty Foot square, a plat-form was erected with an ascent of two Steps, and on the top thereof a Chair of State was plac'd for the King to sit on; the Canopy of Crimson-Velvet, under which the King went, was supported by the Lords Drummond, Carnegie, Ramsay, Johnston, Brechin and Yester; his Train by four other Earls Sons, the Lord Ereskin, Montgomery, Newbottle, Machlene; the Supporters of the Canopy being likewise supported by six others, the Sons of Noblemen. On the Kings right hand went the Lord Great Constable; on his left, the Lord Great Marshal: the Honours were carried before him by the chiefest of the Nobility in this order: Immediately before him went the Earl of Argyle carrying the Crown, next before him the Scepter was carried by the Earl of Craford Lindsey, the Sword by the Earl of Roths, the Spurs by the Earl of Eglinton. As soon as they were entred into the Kirk, and the King seated in his Throne, he took the usual Oath which his Predecessors the Kings of Scotland were wont to take at their Coronation. One of each of the Three Estates of Scotland, namely, the Marquess of Argyle (as being of the Nobles) one Baron, and one Burgeis holding the Crown among them; then they delivered it to three Ministers of the Assembly of the Kirk of Scotland, who were appointed by the Estates in Parliament to present it unto them. At the presentation of the Crown to the King by the three Ministers, one of them made his Address in this form:

S I R,

I do present unto you, King Charles, the Crown and Dignity of this Realm.

Then turning his Face towards the People, he said,

Are you willing to have Him for your King, and to become subject to Him?

Whereupon the King turning himself to them, the People cried out with a loud Voice, God save King Charles the Second. Then after he had been annointed by the three Ministers with the Regal Unction, the Crown was set upon his Head by the Marquess of Argyle, the Scepter was also given into his Hand by the Earl of Lindsey, and the Sword carried before him by the Earl of Roths. As soon as the Crown was put upon his Head, he made this short Speech to the People,

I do esteem the Affections of my good People more than the Crowns of Many Kingdoms; and shall be ready, by Gods assistance, to bestow my Life for your defence, wishing to live no longer than I may see Religion and this Kingdom to flourish in all Happiness.

Adding many other expressions of his Love and Affection to the people, and afterwards Mr. Robert Douglass made an hortatory Oration or Sermon to his Majesty.

The Ceremonies of the Coronation ended, and a plentiful Entertainment prepared, the King sate at one Table, and the Lords at another, there passing many Caresses and Testimonies of joy all Dinner time between them; after which they all returned to St. Johnstons, in the same order and pomp they came from thence to Scoon.

After the Coronation, the King intended to march Northwards to hasten the Levies there made, by his presence; but the Nobility and Gentry of the High-lands, promising to complete their numbers with all expedition, He went no farther than Aberdeen; in the mean time, that those Scots that opposed his Authority might be less able to seduce others, Straughan, Swinton, Colonel Dundas (the late Governour of Edenburgh) Major Abernethy, Captain Giffan, and Andrews, were on the fourteenth day of January Excommunicated for complying with the English.

The King having visited Aberdeen, Dundee, and several other good Towns, returned to St. Johnstons to be present at the assembling of the Parliament, which met there on the second of March, and the Duke of Hamilton and many of the Lords that were reconciled to the Kirk, were admitted to their Seats therein. The Parliament applied themselves with all imaginable care for the raising of Souldiers, and proscribed and sequestred the Persons and Estates of all that held correspondence with the English, and that the Levies might be better made, they adjourned the Parliament to the seventeenth of April, and sent Middleton into the North to raise Forces there, and others of Authority in other parts to imploy their interests to draw Souldiers together; and till they should again be convened, a Council of State and Committee of War were appointed of select persons out of each of the three Estates.

Great care was taken for the fortifying of the Town of Sterlin, the King himself going often to view the Works, and encourage the expediting thereof. In the mean time on the fifteenth of April, in a Mist, the Lord Montgomery, Son to the Earl of Eglinton, and the Lord Cranston, with five hundred Horse and Dragoons, march'd from Sterlin, and resolutely fell into Lithgow, whence having taken what Prisoners they could in haste meet with, they retreated; yet before they could get to Sterlin, Major Sydenham the Governour of Lith-

Cromwell being at Edenburgh, having notice how the Kings Army lay encamped at Sterlin, and that abun-

1651 abundance of Provision was brought in dayly in order to an intended March into England; and that he might be in readines to prevent it, he drew all his Forces together, and encamped near Edenburgh.

The Parliament of Scotland were about this time again assembled at St. Johnstons, and very busie in consultation about their Militia, and providing for the Peace and security of the Kingdom. Middletons Northern Levies amounted to near eight thousand, and it was much controverted, whether those Forces should make a distinct Army, or joyn with the Southern Army; but at last a conjunction of all was agreed; but because there was some emulation betwixt Lesley and Middleton about Chief Command of the Army, the King resolved to take it himself to prevent all discontents therein.

The Kings Birth-day celebrated by the Scots.

The 29th of May, being the Kings Birth-day, was celebrated in Scotland with great solemnity and feasting, and there was a Muster of all the Troops and Companies, and at night all the streets blazed with Bon-fires, & the Cannons were shot off from Sterlin, Brunt-Island, and the rest of the Scotch Garrisons; but not any place shewed their affection to the King in so particular a manner as the Town of Dundee, from which a large contribution of Money was collected towards his assistance, and the Citizens presented to him a rich and stately Tent, and six pieces of Ordnance, and raised a Regiment of Horse at their own charge.

About the beginning of June the Parliament of Scotland ended, having before their dissolution given large Commissions and Instructions for the Pressing of Men in all parts of the Kingdom beyond Fife, and in the Western parts for a new Army, which was to consist of fifteen thousand Foot, and three thousand Horse and Dragoons.

An Act of Oblivion in Scotland

They concluded in a very calm and admirable temper, having passed an Act of Oblivion for all things done thitherto, inviting thereby all parties to joyn in carrying on the service of the King, and a new Engagement with the Sacrament was taken by all the Nobility, and Officers and Souldiers of the Army to adhere to him; whereby all Faction and division seemed in a great measure to be obliterated, and Warreston and those with him that were treacherous or dissenters not before summoned, were on the penalty of Excommunication to appear at the Assembly at Sterlin by a limited time.

Cromwell was very vigilant all this while, and waited greedily for any opportunity to draw the Scotch Army to an Engagement, and for that purpose he marched to Newbridge, and from thence to Lithgow, where from the Battlements of the Castle he discerned the Tents of the Scotch Army encamped in Tornwood about four miles on this side Sterlin, having cast up a regular and well-fortified Line, with Bulwarks and Guns mounted for their defence, and having a River behind them, over which they might at pleasure pass.

The King did not think the Force he should raise in Scotland able to fight Cromwell and invade England, without some preparations there for his assistance, to divide the English Forces at home, to which end he kept intelligence with several of his friends in London, Lancashire and other parts. And it was contrived that the Duke of Buckingham, the Lord Wilmot, and Major General Massey should with a Body of Horse march into England to joyn with a Party in Lancashire, who were by a prefixt time to be in Arms: but in the midst of these endeavours all their hopes were blasted by the taking of a Ship at Ayr in Scotland, which had been bound to the Earl of Derby in the Isle of Man, and the seizing of Mr. Berkenhead an Agent in the business, by whose Letters all was detected; and thereupon were apprehended Mr. Thomas Cook of Grays-Inne, Mr. Gibbons a Taylor, and Mr. Potter an Apothecary, together with Mr. Love, Mr. Jenkins, and Dr. Drake, and several other Presbyterian Ministers, who were brought before a High Court of Justice, and tried for their Lives, and about the later end of July, Gibbons, Potter, and Love were sentenced to death, and a while after Gibbons and Love were executed: for at this time the English Parliament thought it necessary to shew some severity to the Presbyterian Party, to deter them from joyning with the Scots upon their coming with the King into England, which was dayly expected.

Cromwell finding his Provision begin to be scarce, marched on the third of July close to the Scotch Trenches, and drew up his Army in Battalia, to provoke them to Battel; whereupon they in the night planted most of their Cannon on the brow of the Hill, and the next morning saluted the English with fifty great Shot, which made Cromwell draw back, and give over a Resolution he had to force the Trenches; but since he could not effect any thing here, he made it his next work to land some of his Forces on Fife side; and for that Service Colonel Overton was sent with 1600 Foot, and four Troops of Horse, who at Queens-ferry without much difficulty forced his landing, and Cromwell at the same time marched up with his whole Army close to the Scots, with an intent to have fallen upon their Rear; in case they should have moved that way to disturb the enterprize. Yet to drive the English out of Fife four thousand Horse and Foot were appointed to march against them, under the Command of Sir John Brown, which was not done so privately, but Cromwell had notice of it, and he sent Major General Lambert and Colonel Okey with two Regiments of Horse and two of Foot, who were transported over the water, and being united with the rest, they engaged Sir John Brown, and gave him an overthrow, and took himself and Colonel Buchanan, and fourteen hundred more Prisoners, and slew about two thousand; by which Victory the English gained so firm a footing in Fife, that they were not easily to be repelled: and soon after Brunt-Island, and a strong Castle upon the River called Inchgarvie were taken by surrender. And now the King and his Army were necessitated to take that course which long since had been designed, to march directly for England. Cromwell that he might make himself Master of the Pass at Sterlin, resolved first to set upon St. Johnstons, which after one days Siege was gained. 1651 as soon as he had knowledge of this loss, marched with his Army with all haste Southwards: this departure of the King altered Cromwell's designs upon Sterlin, and he drew his Forces back again over the Friith, making what expedition he could to overtake his Majesty; but the Scots were many days march before him. Major General Harrison with about three thousand Horse and Dragoons that lay nearest England, had Orders to march to attend the Kings motions, and Major General Lambert with about as many more was appointed by advice of a Council of Warre to speed after them, and endeavour to fall upon their Rear: and Cromwell himselfe began his march from Leith with a thousand Horse and Foot, the very same day the Royal Army entred upon English ground by the way of Carlisle, which was on the sixth of August. Upon the expectation of the Kings coming into England, a party in North-Wales began to rise, intending to have joyned with the Earl of Darby, who was to come from the Isle of Man; but this design vanished to nothing.

The great By that time the King was come with his Ar-oppositi- my as far as Lancashire, he was somewhat hard on that he beset, both by the Forces that followed him out meets of Scotland, and those that in a short time were with. raised in England against him. He had in his Rear General Cromwell, (who had left General Monk Commander in Chief in his absence with a small dis-joynted Force to carry on the Work in Scotland:) In his Van were the two Major Generals, Lambert and Harrison, who by long marches got before him, unto whom there came up two thousand of the Countrey-Militia out of Staffordshire, and four thousand under the Command of Colonel Birch out of Lancashire, Cheshire, and other parts: and to flank him, the Lord Fairfax in Yorkshire appeared in the Field with many Troops. Moreover, the City of London poured out a good part of its Militia, and the adjacent Counties, were by strict Order of the Parliament enjoyn'd to set out Men and Horses at their own charges: nor (which was the worst presage) did the Scotch Army it self keep entire, being curtailed off about five thousand men, which dropt away by degrees, there remaining not complete, as was generally supposed, by that time they came to Worcester, thirteen thousand men. The Kings hopes also failed him of the general coming in of the Countrey; for the most considerable supply that came to him, was only one Troop of Horse commanded by Captain Cecil Howard, Son of the Lord Howard of Estrich. Nor is it much wondered at, since the Parliaments Forces had so powerfully over-spread the Countrey, that none could well have the opportunity to stir in behalf of the King; so that before the deciding blow was given, they appeared to be in a very lost and hopeles posture: but the condition of the Scotch Army at this time is best discovered in some intercepted Letters of the Earl of Landardale and others. In one of the Earls, he writes thus:

The Earl of Landerdale's intercepted Letters.

Never men (saith he in one of them) were more heartly, for all their toyl, and seriously you would not know this Army; a natural Purge is wholesome,

(speaking of those that withdrew themselves) 1651 and I hope ours is so, since the ill humours are gone.
The Countrey is kind, and we might have men enough.
His Majesty received the Lord Howards Son graciously, and Knighted him; he is the first, but I have no reason to believe he will be the last that will return to his Duty.

And in another he hath to this effect;

His Majesty is advanced into England as far as Perith with a very good Army, able (by the blessing of God) to do his business. They are, I dare say, near double the number of those with which the * King of Sweden entred Germany. Never was * 6000 any Army so regular as we have been since we came into England; I dare say we have not taken the all with worth of Six pence; and what you hear of our mis- which the fortune in Fife, or whatever our Enemies Print or King of Write, trust none; this is the best Scotch Army that first enever I saw, and I hope shall prove best. All those tred Germany.
that were unwilling to hazard all in this cause with their King, have, upon a specious pretence, most of them left us. This is a natural Purge, and will do us much good.

And my Lord Wentworth, in a Letter to my The Lord Lord Crofts, writes thus: By Gods Grace we are Wentworth come as far as Perith in Cumberland, with a good his Letter Army of fourteen or fifteen thousand Foot, and six to the thousand Horse, all absolutely at the Kings Command, Crofts, as much as any Army that ever I saw under the Command of his Father.

But in one of Duke Hamiltons to the same Lord, things appear not so well as those Relations describe; his Letter says thus:

We are now laughing all at the ridiculousness of Duke Hamilton's
our present State: We have quit Scotland being to the scarce able to maintain it, and yet we grasp at all, same.
and nothing but all will satisfy us, or to lose all. I confess, I cannot tell you whether our hopes or fears are greatest; but we have one stout Argument, Despair; for we must now either stoutly fight, or die; all the Rogues have left us. I shall not say, whether for fear or disloyalty; but all now with his Majesty are such as will not dispute his Commands.

The King at his first entrance upon English The King ground was proclaimed King of Great Britain at proclaimed the Head of the Army with great acclamations ed at the and shooting off the Cannon, he being then at Head of Perith in Cumberland, and so afterwards at every his Army Market-Town through which he marcht. He met in England no considerable resistance till he came to Warrington-Bridge, where Lambert endeavoured to impede his passage, but the King made his way through with loss to his opposer; and the Parliament at London began to apprehend the prosperity of his Fortune; but his wearied Forces could not, it seems, hold out a march of that length, so that he came on the 22^d. of August to Worcester, The King where after one or two Repulses by the Forces comes to that kept that City, he quickly entred, through Worcester.
the ready assistance of the Inhabitants, who not only not opposed, but also helped to beat the Parliament Souldiers out of the Town. Advice came to the King of the distracted condition of those in London, which occasioned a debate in Council there.

1651 thereupon for his repair thither, but upon the result it was resolved on as a thing most agreeable to their present condition to stay where they were, and to make good all the Passes that were thereabouts for their better security. On the 27th of August they kept a solemn Fast, and the next day had a general Rendezvous, at which the Countrey came in far more considerably than at any time before, since their arrival in England. The King as he was in his march to Worcester, dispatched away Messages and Invitations unto several Governours of Towns and Castles, to deliver up unto his use those places which they had of his in their possession, and principally to Sir Thomas Middleton Governour of Chirk Castle in Shropshire, and to Colonel Mackworth Governour of Shrewsbury: To the first the Earl of Derby also writ, and the Letters were sent by one Simkins, whom Sir Thomas caused to be seized and sent to Wrexham: To the Governour of Shrewsbury both a Letter and a Summons were sent by a Trumpeter, which we think remarkable enough to be here inserted, together with his Answer, to shew the temper of those then in Authority.

Colonel Mackworth:

The Kings Letter and Summons to Colonel Mackworth Governour of Shrewsbury. Having sent you herewith a Summons to render into my hands my Town, with the Castle of Shrewsbury, I cannot but perswade my self you will do it, when I consider you a Gentleman of an ancient House, and of very different Principles (as I am informed) from those with whom your employment ranks you at present. If you shall peaceably deliver them unto me, I will not only pardon you what is past, and protect you and yours in your persons, and all that belongs to you, but reward so eminent and seasonable a Testimony of your Loyalty with future trust and favour; and do leave it to your self to propose the Particulars, being upon that condition ready to grant you presently any thing you shall reasonably desire, and to approve my self.

Your Friend
C.R.

The Summons was in these words:

Colonel Mackworth:

Being desirous to attempt all fair ways for recovering our own, before we proceed to force and extremity, and (where the Controversie is with subjects) accounting that a double Victory, which is obtained without effusion of Blood, whereby the hearts that of right belong to us, are gained as well as their strengths: We do hereby summon you to surrender unto us our Town with the Castle of Shrewsbury, as in Duty and Allegiance by the Laws of God and the Land you are bound to do, thereby not only preventing the mischiefs which you may otherwise draw upon your self and that place, but also opening the first door to peace and quietness, and the enjoyment of every one both King and People, of that which appertains to them, under certain and known Laws, the end for which we are come. Given at our Camp at Tong-Norton, this 20th of August.

Unto this Letter and Summons the Governour returned this answer.

For the Commander in Chief of the Scottish Army.

SIR,

By your Trumpet I received two Papers, the one Col. Mackworth's containing a Proposition, the other a direct Summons for the Rendition of the Town and Castle of Shrewsbury, the Custody whereof I have received by Authority of Parliament; and if you believe me a Gentleman (as you say you do) you may believe I will be faithful to my Trust; to the violation whereof, neither allurements can perswade me, nor threatnings of Force, especially when but Paper ones, compell me. What Principles I am judged to be of, I know not, but I hope they are such as shall ever declare me honest, and no way differing herein (as I know) from those engaged in the same employment with me, who, should they desert that cause they are embarked in; I resolve to be found, as I am immoveable, the Faithful Servant of the Commonwealth of England.

H. Mackworth.

About two or three days before the Kings arrival at Worcester, the Earl of Derby having landed at Weywater in Lancashire, came to him with two hundred and fifty Foot and sixty Horse, which he brought with him out of the Isle of Man, and immediately returning back into Lancashire to raise a more considerable force, he soon gathered about 1200 men, and so much was he beloved in those parts, that a little more time had made him formidable; with these he was marching upon a design to fall upon Cromwell's own Regiment then quartered at Lancaster in their march towards him; but news came to him of Colonel Lilburn's approach towards him with ten Troops of Horse (which were ordered out of Yorkshire on purpose to hinder his Levies) and two Regiments of Cheshire Foot: The Earl nothing dismayed at this Force, resolved to engage Lilburn and his party, before the other Troops could come to him, and accordingly he charged them so furiously, that he routed the first Troops, and had made an impression so far into their Body, that they begun to be disordered, till the accession of fresh Reserves both of Horse and Foot so overpowred his numbers, that they were totally vanquished: most of the Kings party were Horse, and the fight was in Lanes, were they were much annoyed by the Enemies Musquetiers. There were taken prisoners of Quality, the Lord Widdrington, Sir Thomas Tidersley, Colonel Matthew Boynton, Sir Francis Gamul, Major Trollop, Sir William Throgmorton, Colonel Richard Legg, Colonel Ratliff, Gerard, and some others whose names we know not, and many of these named died of their wounds. The Earl of Derby (having lost his George and Garter) fled with about thirty Horse towards Worcester, having sheltered himself one night in his way in a house called Boscobel, which Heaven by this means had prepared for the Kings retreat and preservation.

By this time Cromwell had surrounded Worcester with his spreading Host, in as near a compass surrounded as the Rivers and Passes would suffer him, the Kings Army as yet lying out of the Town a mile in the fields. The first Pass endeavoured to be taken

The Scots having thus abandoned the place where they were, it was presently possessed by a strong party of Horse and Foot, in order to the present advance of the rest of the Army.

The Kings Army was drawn up very near to Worcester, and made many excursions, breaking down two or three Bridges over the River Tam betwixt the Enemy and them, and shewing a well-order'd and governed courage; but September the Third, that ominous day being arrived, Cromwell resolved to venture the event upon it former Auspicia, and to that purpose having his Boats in readiness, he passed over his men in the afternoon of that day, and drew them all into a fighting posture, and having given the signal to the whole Army to fall on, the fight was begun in this manner.

Worcester Fight.

Cromwell himself in person (about four of the Clock) with his Life-Guard and Colonel Hackers Regiment of Horse, with part of his own Foot Regiment, with the intire Regiments of Colonel Ingoldsby and Colonel Fairfax, marched directly towards the City, and after him Lieutenant-General Fleetwood advanced with Colonel Goff's and Major General Deans Regiments; the Kings Forces encountering them at the Hedges betwixt the City and them, and disputing every field with them, in such Order and with such Gallantry, that those already engaged (lest they should be wholly discouraged with the hotness of this service) were relieved by Reserves, and they by others, no considerable progress was yet made, the Highlanders proving excellent Fire-men, and coming to the butt-end of Musquet, till wearied with continual action, and their Ammunition spent, the King being then upon the place) commanded them in some haste into the City, and hastened himself to the other side, where Colonel Hayns his Regiment with Cobbets stood about Powick-Bridge, and were entertained with no less Man-hood and slaughter, than those on the other side; and though one Colonel Matthews was the Reserve to these two Regiments, yet did the Scotch Foot fairly drive them from their Ground, till at last being harassed out, and no Seconds or Supplies to be expected, in a careless regard of the Enemy, as if they feared not to make which way they pleased, they drew likewise into the Town, as did another Brigade which opposed the Regiments of the Lord Gray and Colonel Gibbons joyned with two others on another part. The Kings Army was drawn very close together, and sent out several Bodies, who charged very briskly on the Generals side, where the fight was hottest, (He having brought on the Militia Forces to relieve his other Troops.) In the Head of one of these Bodies the King himself charged with marvellous Gallantry and Conduct, and press'd so hard upon Cromwell's Life-Guard, that the Troop was very much disordered, and the Captain very dangerously wounded; and in another Charge Duke Hamilton, (who behaved himself with undaunted Courage and Resolution) received a Shot on his Thigh, whereof presently after he died.

Duke Hamilton

this fight.

The Militia Regiments of Essex, Surry, and Cheshire were much annoyed by the Scots, and many of their men slain; but Cromwell drew on fresh and intire Brigades and Regiments, which were in Reserve, of the Veterane Bands, by which the Royallists were so overpowered, that they were forced to retreat into the City, which they could not do with such Order, but many of the Cromwellians got in with them. Lesley with two thousand Horse (upon what account not known) not stirring out of the Town to relieve his Party, which the Enemy entered. The King retired to his Quarters for a while, and about seven at night the Enemy gained the Fort-Royal; at which time His Majesty left the City, passing out at Saint Martin's Gate, accompanied with about sixty Horse of the chiefest and most confident of his Retinue (though many more pressed to bear him company) and it was reported, that Cobbet very narrowly mist of him as he left his Lodging.

made his escape.

The Enemies Foot was now got into the Town, and according to their order, fell a plundering the Inhabitants in a most barbarous manner, giving no Quarter to any that they found in the Streets: and through this their greediness of spoil, they kept the Gates shut, and the Horse out, lest they should have shared the better part; and thereby favoured (as God would have it) the Kings escape. Some Scots who had got into one of the Churches held out till next morning, when they obtained Quarter for Life; by which time there was not an Inhabitant in Worcester, Friend or Foe, left worth a Shilling of what they had in the Town; but the Royal Inhabitants lost least by the Ravage, being supplied with fresh Wares to their desires by the honest Citizens of London, without any scruple of Credit or Payment, and their Debts were forgiven till such time as God should enable them to pay, which the Gentry and Inhabitants round about them endeavoured to bring to pass, by their more than ordinary resort to that Market for all Necessaries, and upon all Occasions. The Mayor (who was Knighted by the King) and all the Aldermen were committed to Prison, and the Wife of one Guyes (whose Husband for betraying the designs of the King in that Garrison, was hanged) was rewarded by the Parliament with two hundred pounds per Annum, and two hundred pounds in Money.

There were slain in the Field, in the Town, and in pursuit some 2000, and about 8000 were taken Prisoners in several places: most of the English Common-men escaping by their Shibboleth; but at Newport in the pursuit were taken the Earl of Lauderdale, Earl of Rothes, Earl of Carnworth, Earl of Kelly, Earl of Derby, Earl of Cleveland, Sir John Packington, Lord Spyne, Sir Ralph Clare, Sir Charles Cunningham, Colonel Graves, Mr. Richard Fanshawe, Secretary to the King, many also whose names we have not, (viz.) 6 Colonels of Horse, 13 of Foot, 9 Lieutenant-Colonels of Horse, 8 Lieutenant-Colonels of Foot, 6 Majors of Horse, 13 Majors of Foot, 37 Captains of Horse, 72 Captains of Foot, 55 Quarter-Masters, 89 Lieutenants; there were taken also some General Officers, with 76 Cornets of Horse, 99 Ensigns of Foot, 90 Quarter-Masters, 80 of the Kings Servants, with the Kings 1651 Kings Standard which he had set up when he summoned the Country, the Kings Coach and Horses, and Collar of SS's, but the Kings Person they had no power to touch; which recompensed all the other loss.

The King deliberates whether to flye.

He (as was said before) departed in the dusk, leaving Colonel Careless in the Rear, to keep the Enemy in dispute, while he was something forward on his way, and the approaching night might favour his escape. To which end, all Persons about him were commanded to speak French, and a present Consultation was held which course they should steer, and it was resolved by my Lord of Derby, that they should make what speed they could, and recover a place called Whiteladies before morning, which was some 25 miles from Worcester; and thereupon one Master Giffard then in the company, was called for his guidance thither; and one Walker (that had been formerly a Scout-master in the Kings Army) was his assistant, yet the way was mistaken as they passed a Heath, but by good providence soon recovered.

The Lords leave him at Whiteladies.

Between three and four a clock the King reached this place, and Master Giffard (after some knocking at the door,) called up one George Pendrill, a Servant in the House, who hearing and knowing his voice, ran down in his shirt and opened the door, and the King and his Retinue entered; where after a little debate about the security of his person, the said Earl having called thither William Pendrill the House-keeper of Boscobell, and dispatch'd another towards Tong to see if the Coast was yet clear; His Majesty in the mean while had his hair cut off, and his Buff-doublet and Linnen-breeches buried, and he was disguised in Country habit, with adjuration of the fidelity of the Pendrills (who were now with their Brother-in-Law Francis Yates in number five) committed and entrusted by the Earl of Derby to their fidelity, which they most solemnly and dutifully promised. Then the Earl and the rest of the Lords, viz. the Duke of Buckingham and that Train, with tears took their leave (Derby would have staid, but there was no probability of secrecy for two) and my Lord Wilmot with John Pendrill withdrew himself from that company to another retreat; the rest (except the Duke who lay concealed in other friends houses about that Country) were taken as aforesaid at Newport by Lilburns Horse, the same who had defeated the Earl of Derby, who now rendred himself a Prisoner to one Captain Edge of Lancashire, on promise for quarter for life.

The King personates a Wood-cutter.

As soon as the King was thus left by his Company, with a Wood-bill in his hand, he was conducted into a Wood or Coppice near adjoining, taking the name of William Jones a Wood-cutter, newly come thither for work, and was accordingly instructed in his Tongue and Behaviour: That day proved very wet, so that Yates his Wife brought him a blanket to cover him, and a dish of Milk and Apples for his refreshment; and at night against his coming home (where the Mother of the Pendrills at her Son Richard's house most joyfully welcom'd him) and provided an ordinary Country Supper; which ended, the King with Richard his guide resolved for Wales, and went to one Master Wolfe of Midely, where for fear of search, he was fain to take up his Quarters in the Barn, where Master Wolfe and his Wife attended on him. Here his Majesty understood that the Passes over the Water, and the River Wy, were so guarded, that it was unreasonable for him to adventure into Wales; so that on Friday night he retreated in his woollen accoutrements about his legs (in which he had lain in that hard lodging in great pain and soreness to Boscobell, where he found Colonel Careless (who had also betaken himself thither for shelter; and by his direction, that Saturday the King went into the Wood, (from the pleasantness whereof the house took its name) and ascended into the top of that most celebrated Oak, which being thick with branches stretching and shadowing fore-right, was altogether impervious to the sight: and here the Colonel bore him company while he laid his head, and slept upon a pillow in his lap. At night they both descended, and came into the house and refresh'd themselves, and the King perceiving the secrecy of the place, was not willing to keep longer abroad. He past away the Sunday in a kind of Arbour or Banqueting-house at the end of the Garden, and there John Pendrill came to him from my Lord Wilmot, to conduct him to Mr. Whitgraves house at Moseley; wither with much difficulty and danger he himself had arrived, but the safety there answered all. The King approved of my Lord Wilmot's advice, and on Munday night (with the guard of the five brethren) and the help of the Millers horse, he came to Mr. Whitgraves, where he was gladly received by my Lord and that Gentleman, and conveyed into a secret place; and there it was considered what course to take for a further progression in the Kings escape; and to this purpose one Colonel Lane of Bentley was made acquainted with it, and by them it was agreed, that Mistress Jane Lane upon pretence of assisting at the Child-bed of her Sister, should ride to Bristol, and the King as her Servant ride before her, with one Mr. Lassels and his wife behind him, and a Pass for their more security in travel was procured.

Mrs. Jane Lane undertakes to convey him to Bristol

On their way thither, my Lord Wilmot (as of chance) met with them, having a Hawk on his fist, and so they journeyed together to Bromsgrave, where the Kings Horse losing a shoe, He was forc'd to carry his Horse to a Farrier, who inquiring of News of the King, and being answered by his Majesty, that he believed the King was escaped into Scotland; he replied, that no doubt the King was secretly somewhere in England, and wish'd he knew where; for that he could get a 1000 l. by taking of him. The King departing from thence, comes to Evesham, where advising how to avoid Troopers then grazing their Horses in the Meadows adjoining; they lighted upon them in a near Village as they rode, but they civilly let them pass on their way to Cirencester to the Crown, where they lodged that night, and went the next day towards Bristol within three Miles of the City, to the House of Mr. Norton of Leigh, the designed journey's end. Here the King feigned himself sick, and took his Cambet 1651 by the order and care of Mrs. Lane; but the next morning coming into the Cellar, he was taken notice of by the Butler, one John Pope, a Souldier formerly in the late Kings Army, who upon an intent look discerned him, and in all dutiful manner discovered himself to him, with such assurance of fidelity, that he gained his Majesties belief so far, as to be imployed by him in getting a Ship for his transportation: thence the King was conducted by my Lord Wilmot to one Colonel Windhams House at Trent in Dorsetshire, where he continued almost three weeks in expectation of a passage from Lime; Soon after his arrival here, Mrs. Jane Lane with Mr. Lassels parted, being openly entertained as Kinsfolk, and came in safety back again to Staffordshire.

The King

Windhams.

My Lord Wilmot and he prevailed with a Merchant to procure a Pass, but were disappointed. The occurrences that hapned here, we cannot certainly relate, only the King was disappointed of a passage which a Merchant had procured for him at Lime (by my Lord Wilmot and Colonel Windhams means;) and though the fault was not in the Merchant, but the dejected spirit of the Master of the Bark; yet this disappointment had like to have proved the Kings ruine, by the shooing of my Lord Wilmots Horse, (there was one Mr. Henry Peters that attended him for his Guide.) The Hostler and the Smith discovered by the shooes, that they were come somewhere from the Northern parts by their manner of nailing, and presently raised a rumour of the Kings being thereabouts; and whilst the Smith went to advise with a Minister of the matter, my Lord was got away by providence, and the King came to Bridport; where as 'tis since reported, he had like to have been known by an Hostler, as he was setting up the Horses, who welcom'd him as having formerly seen him at Exeter, but did not distinguish who he was, and the King with a proffer of drinking with him when he was more at leisure, withdrew himself from any further discovery. That night they touched at Broad-Windfor, where again the King met with some disturbance by Souldiers then filling those places, in order to their shipping for Jersey. But after all these surprizing adventures, he got again to Colonel Windhams, with the Lord Wilmot, who had overtaken them, and passed by them at Bridport as was agreed, and thence (for it could not be safe to continue longer in that place) he was sent to Salisbury to look out for another Sanctuary, and to confer to that purpose with Master Coventry, who agreed to bring him to Mrs. Hides house at a Village called Heal. The King in his way to Salisbury came to a Town called Mere to the George, an acquaintance of the Colonels, where drinking in the Cellar, the Hostle seeing the King stand off as a servant, said, Thou lookest like an honest Fellow, Here's an Health to the King; who unready answering it, made the man expostulate with the Colonel what Fellow he had brought. The King from Mere went to the House of Mrs. Hide, and was joyfully there received, and introduced to a secret place in the House, and here Colonel Robert Phillips came to him, and Colonel Windham took his leave of his Majesty, and returned; and Dr. Hinchman after made Bishop of London, had the honour to be made acquainted with his condition; and Phillips was presently dispatch'd to procure some shipping at Southampton, where the Barks being all taken up, and employed by the Parliament, he returned with his labour lost, but meeting with Colonel Gunter, he (being informed of the business) undertook to provide a Bark at Brightemstead in Suffex, which he effected, and thither the King (and my Lord Wilmot) having taken leave of this Noble Matron and the Doctor, accompanied with Colonel Phillips, (passing by night near Portsmouth,) came in two days to an Inn at Brightemstead, where Colonel Gunter and one Master Mausfel the Merchant, who at Gunters request hired the Ship, and the Ship-maister Tetershall (now a Captain in his Majesties Navy) met him, and at Supper they set down together with his Majesty, when the Master presently discovered him, having formerly seen him in the Downs; when he obtained the release of his Ship laden from Newcastle; whereupon the King conferred with the Master, who (being wrought upon by promises and money paid down, and his own Loyalty) agreed to transport him to France, and departed to call up his Mariners then on shore (pretending his Ship half-laden with coals was a drift; but coming home for a bottle of Aqua-vite, his Wife by the unseasonableness of the night suspecting the truth, encouraged him to the undertaking, not caring (as she said) if she and her little ones begged their bread, so the King were in safety. About five of the clock in the dark of the morning on the 20th of October the King embarked, with my Lord Wilmot, and keeping the shore all that day, in the evening crossed over, and at dark night landed near Diep in France. In their passage, the King sitting upon the Deck, and directing the course, or, as they call it, conning the Ship, one of the Mariners blowing Tobacco in his face, the Master bid him go further off the Gentleman, who murmuring, unwittingly replied, That a Cat might look upon a King. At Rouen the King had his clothes changed by two English Merchants residing there, and was there saluted (though at first hardly known) by Dr. Earls late Bishop of Salisbury, and upon notice of his arrival, the Queen-Mother and the Duke of Orleans, and that whole Court went out to meet him, and congratulate his wonderful deliverance: a Providence indeed not parallel'd in History, and able to have convinced his Rebels, if their rage had not blinded them; but it cleared the minds and hopes of his Subjects, by this Pledge of their deliverance from thralldome, in this marvellous protection of Gods Anointed; (no less than two and fifty persons being privy to his Escape.)

Very few of the Nobles and Officers that came in with him from Scotland escaped, David Lesley and Lieutenant General Middleton were taken in Lancashire, and carried Prisoners to Chester, from whence with the Earl of Landerdale, Kelly, Rother, and others they were committed to the Tower, from whence my Lord Middleton happily escaped, the rest were not long after sent to Windfor-Castle, where they continued till the Restitution of the King to his Government.

On the 21th of September, Cromwell came to London,

1651 London, and was met about Aſton with the Speaker and the Members of Parliament, and the Lord Mayor of London and Recorder Steel, who in a ſet ſpeech congratulated his great ſucceſſes, and like a falſe Prophet, by a miſtaken Proleptis applied to him theſe words of the Pſalmiſt, To bind their Kings in Chains, and their Nobles in Fetters of Iron, in an arrogant exaltation of his Atchievement: next day the Common Priſoners (being driven like a herd of Swine) were brought through Weſtminſter into Tutbil fields (a ſadder ſpectacle was never ſeen, except the miſerable place of their defeat) and there ſold to ſeveral Merchants, and ſent to the Barbadoes; the Colours taken were likewise hanged up in Weſtminſter-Hall, with thoſe taken before at Preſton and Dunbar.

Cromwell comes with his Priſoners to London.

We have hitherto without any digreſſion related the fortune of the King from the time of his quitting Scotland to his ſafe arrival in France; but we ſhall now briefly deſcribe the tranſactions that paſſed in Scotland at that time: Cromwell when he left the King conſtituted (as is hinted) General Monk Commander in Chief of the Engliſh Army there; which was an Action that carried great envy with it from thoſe of his own party, becauſe Monk had but lately engaged with them; and it was objected, that he had been heard to ſay he will never draw a Sword in England againſt the King or his Intereſt, and therefore they could not expect faithful ſervice from him in Scotland againſt the ſame party; but it is ſaid, he gave ſuch aſſurance to Cromwell of his fidelity in that ſtation againſt that people, (who were the firſt raiſers of thoſe unhappy ſtorms that overſpread our Nation with the miſeries of War and Sedition) that he would not be perſwaded to alter his choice.

The Engliſh Army left with the General exceeded not ſix thouſand men, and many of theſe were ſick and weak by long marches, but they had by ſeveral ſucceſſful encounters gained a great reputation, and the Scots were much diſpirited thereby, ſo that whiſt he found part of his forces were in good heart and his enemies dejected, he immediately march'd to Sterlin, and came thither by that time Cromwell got into England.

Sterlin with the Caſtle ſurrendered to General Monk.

Sterlin was at that time governed by Colonel Cunningham, who was ſo ſurprized at the ſuddain approach of the Engliſh Army, (believing them to be of much greater numbers than they really were) that after a ſhort ſiege he ſurrendered the Town and Caſtle upon Articles on the 14th of Auguſt; where the Kings Royal Robes, the Cloath of State, and all the Scotch Records, were found and ſeized, together with five thouſand Arms and forty piece of Ordnance, and great ſtore of Ammunition; but all the goods of private perſons there depoſited, were delivered to ſuch as would own them: over the door of the Chappel that belongs to the Caſtle, this Motto in the time of King James was written, J. C. R. Nobis hæc invicta miſerunt Centum ſex Proavi 1617. which ſhews that that place had remained unconquered during the Reigns of an hundred and ſix Kings, and ſo continued all his time and his Sons.

The next place to which the General marched after the taking of Sterlin, was Dundee, to which Town the chief of the Inhabitants of Edenburgh and many other Towns and places had conveyed the beſt part of their Moveables, as a ſecure depository, ſo that there was great riches in it.

Major Lumsdale was Governour of the Town, who had therein eight hundred Souldiers, beſides ſome Companies of armed Inhabitants, whereby he thought himſelf in ſo good a condition, that when the General drew near the place, and ſent a ſummons to him, he returned a very ſlighting answer: hereupon he environed the Town with his Army; but at his firſt coming thither, hearing that old General Leſly and ſeveral of the Lords of Scotland were met at Elliot (about fourteen miles from Dundee) to raiſe Souldiers, he ſent Colonel Alured and Colonel Morgan with a thouſand Horſe and Dragoons to diſturb the Levies, leaving privately the chief conduct and care of the deſign to his confident Colonel Morgan, the other (though the elder Colonel) being not very competent for ſuch a ſervice. Theſe, as ſoon as they had their Orders, marched in the night and took Scotch Guides to ſhew them the way to the Town, and by the help of ſome few Scotch Souldiers, who had revolted to the Engliſh, they ſo diſſembled their march, that the Countrey took them for part of their own forces going to Elliot, ſo that they were got undiscovered beyond the Town about three of the clock in the morning, and then they marched into it with little or no reſiſtance, and took 300 Noblemen, Gentlemen, and Miniſters, with about 70 of their Servants, the one of which was General Leſly (who was found hid in a cloſe Cupboard-bed) the Earls Marſhal, Crawford, Lindſey and Keith, and the Lords Ogilby, Burgenny, Humie and Lee, with many other Knights and Gentlemen of note; theſe were all ſhipped for London, but old Leſly putting in at Newcaſtle, was by the favour of Sir Arthur Hazle- rig (then Governor thereof) permitted to ſtay in Northumberland with one De la Val his Son-in-law, upon promiſe to be a true Priſoner.

Old General Leſly and divers other Scotch Nobles ſurprized at Elliot.

The General by this means had prevented all poſſibility of diſturbance in his Siege, and ſeeing he could not by fair means prevail with the Governour to yield up the Town, though he knew by the ſurprize of Elliot all hope of relief failed, on the firſt of September he took it by ſtorm, putting all to the Sword that were found in Arms. The Governour with ſome few for a while ſaved themſelves in a Steeple, but were ſmothered out by the burning of wet ſtraw, and then they yielded on mercy to one Captain Kelly of Colonel Morgan's Regiment, who was carrying him to the General with purpoſe to intercede for his life, becauſe of the gallantry of his behaviour in defence of the Town, but as he was going with him, one Major Butler barbarouſly ſhot him dead. The Souldiers had very rich booty in this Garrifon, for it was at this time the richeſt Town in Scotland, and there were ſixty fail of Ships in the Harbour. After this taking of Dundee, St. Andrews, Aberdeen, with other Towns, Caſtles and ſtrong places either voluntarily ſubmitted or rendered upon Summons.

Dundee taken by ſtorm.

Theſe ſucceſſes did not mitigate the ſeverity of the Rulers at Weſtminſter, who about the end of September appointed a Court-Marſhall to ſit at Cheſter, for the Tryal of the Earl of Derby and

The Earl of Derby beheaded at Bolton in Lancashire.

The Earl upon his Tryal pleaded the Quarter given him by Captain Edge that took him prisoner, which was over-ruled by the Court, and he was sentenced to be beheaded, and on the 15th. of October, that rigorous Sentence was executed on him at Bolton in Lancashire; and for the same cause of Loyalty to their Sovereign, and by the same Court, Sir Timothy Fetherstonhaugh, Captain Benbow, and Captain Sympkins were sentenced to death, and executed.

Several Royalists taken and imprisoned in the Tower.

This sad occasion obliges us to a further account of those English Royalists who were taken in, and after the same Battel of Worcester, among whom were (besides others mentioned) the Lord Grandison, Sir John Packington, Colonel Blague, Colonel Edward Braughton, and Major General Masséy; these were all except Masséy presently imprisoned in the Tower; but he being much wounded and tired with riding as he endeavoured to escape, delivered himself up to the Countess of Stamford, who secured him in her house till he was cured of his wounds, upon his engagement to be a true Prisoner; and when he was recovered, he was also sent to the Tower, from whence by a disguise not long after he made his escape. Colonel Wogan was much sought after by the pursuers, but he got safe to the High-lands in Scotland, being resolved to prosecute the Kings Quarrel where Nature had fixt her Non Ultra.

The Isles of Man and Jersey, &c. surrendered to the Parliament.

There remained nothing in England of the ancient Dominions and Territories thereof unsubdued to the Power of the Parliament, except the Isle of Man, and the Island of Jersey, and Castle Cornet in the Isle of Guernsey, which were all about this time surrendered to the Authority of the English Common wealth, and not only these adjacent Islands, but what was in America appertaining to the Crown of England came quickly into their Jurisdiction, as did the Island of Barbadoes (whereof the Lord Willoughby of Parham was Governour for the King) which was yielded up upon Articles to Sir George Ayscough about the beginning of January. The Articles were very favourable both to the Governour and Inhabitants, the first having liberty of returning to England, with freedom to his person and estate, and the later being indemnified for what ever they had done in hostility against the Parliament. It is said, the gaining of this Island was much facilitated by one Colonel Muddysford then in difference with the Governour, whom Sir George had drawn to his party, and by whose power and influence in the Island it was easily obtained. Hereupon the Islands of Mevis and St. Christopher thought it in vain to stand out, but both submitted to Sir George Ayscough.

Popham and Ireton yield to Fate.

Towards the End of this year two eminent Commanders of the English Common wealth were taken away by death, viz. General Edward Popham, one of the Generals at Sea; and Ireton, Son-in-law to Cromwell, and Deputy of Ireland who died of a contagious fever contracted at the Siege of the City of Limrick in Ireland, which (after an obstinate resistance) he had newly gained. His Corps was transported to England, and brought to London, and interred in Henry the Seventh's Chappel in Westminster with a magnificent funeral pomp and state. He was no doubt a man of much dispatch, of dextrous and able parts, had they been employed in honest designs; and was thought to have been a greater contriver and prompter in the cheifest of his Father-in-laws stratagems. For a time after his decease, Lieutenant General Edmund Ludlow executed his Office, till Colonel Charles Fleetwood who had succeeded him in his wife, was thereby preferred to succeed him in the Deputiship of Ireland.

The English Common wealth having in some measure quieted things at home, and thinking themselves in a fair way to a calm of Peace and Tranquillity, took upon them now to give Laws to their subjected Dominions, as also to make Acts of Grace to encourage their Subjects quietly to submit to them: The first related to Scotland, which being in a short time totally brought under, (for besides the gaining of Dunbarton Castle, which was delivered up by Sir Charles Ereskin, and Dunnoter Castle which was taken by Colonel Morgan, and the Isles of Orkney, the Hebrides, and even Schetland, which is thought by some to be the same that the Antients called Ultima Thule, could not escape their Conquest, which was the work of Colonel Overton) they take into consideration a project, which however it being attempted in former times, could be brought to no effect, they resolved to go through with; namely, an Union of England and Scotland, and Incorporating of both Nations into one Common-wealth: This was mainly opposed and remonstrated against by the Scotch Kirk, though in vain; for the Parliament of England, (as they called themselves) had resolved upon an Act for the Union of Scotland, and the Abolishing of Kingly Government in that Nation; intending that the Shires or Burghs should chuse their Deputies to represent them in Parliament, in such a proportionable number as the Parliament should think fit. And Commissioners were sent from hence in behalf of the Common wealth of England, to treat concerning this Union with the Natives, whom they found but very cold entertainers of their Proffer, besides the tough opposition of the Clergy. These Commissioners were Oliver St. Johns, Sir Henry Vane, Major General Dean, Major Salway, Colonel Fenwick, and Alderman Tichburn: And not long after were sent down as Itinerant Judges to hear, determine, and make inspection into all things belonging to the Government of that Nation, Mr. George Smith, Mr. John March, Mr. Edward Mosely, and Mr. William Lockart a Scotchman: But these Judges were several times altered at pleasure. But to the Commissioners there came in and submitted divers of the Scotch Nobility; as the Marquess of Huntly, the Earls of Weems, Angus, and Calender, and the Lord Belcarri, and others; but of all that came in of the Nobility, the Marquess of Argyle was he that most complied and adhered to the Common wealth Interest, notwithstanding all the professions and shew he made when the King was in Scotland, and of the Lairds that acted amongst the

The Parliaments Act of Oblivion.

The next Act of Grace was to England, and was an Act of Oblivion, wherein they published it to be their intention to forget all injuries, and pardon all hostilities hitherto committed against them, upon condition of taking an Engagement, which they imposed upon all people, wherein they were to promise To be true and faithful to the Commonwealth of England as then established, without King or House of Lords; out of which nevertheless were excepted the Lord Goring and his Sons, Sir John Webster of Amsterdam, the Executors of the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the slayers of Dorilaus and Afcham.

The occasion of the War with Holland.

Scarce were these and some other little transactions finished at home, when there began to be in preparation new Matter for the exercise of their Arms abroad, in respect of a secret grudge which had lain a pretty while smothering between them and their Brother States of Holland, which was probably in a great part occasioned through the slight and indifferent reckoning of Dorilaus (whose Assassination they thought, perhaps, not sufficiently enquired into;) and afterwards of their Embassadors Oliver St. Johns, and Walter Strickland, who being affronted by the Common People in Holland, thought themselves not sufficiently vindicated by the States, nor respected according to the Dignity of their Masters, and therefore came away in discontent; and though the States sent hither afterwards as their Agent Myn Heer Joachim with several Complements and Excuses, with Commission to treat about a fair Correspondence and Commerce with England; yet our States at Westminster were now resolved they should not have their Friendship on such easie terms as before they offered by their Embassadors, since they then made no more account of it: so that they dismissed Joachim after a prefixt time, beyond which he was not to stay, and then proceeded to make an Act, For the Encouragement of Navigation; wherein they prohibited the importing of any Foreign Commodities except upon English Bottoms, or such as were of the Countrey whence the Commodities came; beginning withal to stand high upon claims of Dues and Reparations for the prejudice done us in our Trading: upon which occasion was taken oftentimes to search the Dutch Ships, and sometimes to make prize of them. To complain of these damages, but more especially, if it were possible, to obtain a suppression of the said Act so prejudicial to their Trade, they sent over into England their Embassadors, Myn Heeren Catz, Van de Peere, Sharp and Newport; these men however coming as most zealous Advocates for a speedy pacification, and relying much upon the favourable reception they should meet with here, were nevertheless at their very first Audience accosted with such high demands about the Herring-fishing, the business of Amboyna, and a free Trade in the Schelde, from Middleburgh to Antwerp, that they were able to give but a cold account to their Masters in the Affair they came about: and though some Messages for a while past to and fro for the Vindication of each others actions, the Dutch all the while making great Protestations of their sincere and real intentions towards this Commonwealth) yet still preparations for War were privately made on both sides.

This year ended with an Act for the Banishment of John Lilburn, who being a person of a turbulent nature, had with restless impatience oppugned all Government, in so much that it was said merrily of him, If all the World were dispeopled to him alone, John will be against Lilburn, and Lilburn against John. It was provided in this Act, that if ever he returned without leave from the State, he should suffer as a Felon. That which caused this severity against him at this time was his violent opposition of Sir Arthur Hazlerig, a leading Member of the Parliament about a Coal-pit in his possession, claimed by one Primate: wherein he did not only lay many oppressions and scandals to the charge of Hazlerig, but in the publication thereof arraigned the Justice of the whole Commonwealth.

Lilburn banished.

The States of Holland set out a very great Fleet for the security of their Trade for this year, and in their instructions to Martin Harperz Van Trump their Admiral, they directed him not to strike his Flag to the English Admiral, and the same Orders were given to every of the Ships of War, if occasionally they met any single Ships of England or others, that were not too numerous for their opposition.

The Hollanders set forth a great Fleet.

The English on the other side they knew would not easily lose the Dominion of the Sea, which in all ages they exercised without controul; so that Van Trump coming into Dover-road on the 17th. of May with two and forty Sail, lay there at Anchor, as to dare them to opposition, and notice thereof being given to Blake the English Admiral, he made haste to play up towards him with about 15 Ships and Frigats; but when Trump descried the English Fleet, he weighed his Anchor, and stood away by a wind Eastward, intending (as Blake supposed) to leave them to avoid the dispute of the Flag; but about two hours after they altered their Course, and bore directly with the English Fleet, and Van Trump was headmost, whereupon the English lay by, and put themselves into a fighting posture, judging the Dutch had a resolution to engage. Being come within Musquet-shot, Blake gave Order to fire at his Flag, which was done thrice, and after the third shot, Trump let fly a broad-side, and it was well returned by the English Admiral; and after the exchange of Broad-sides Major Bourn came in to Blake's assistance with eight good Ships, and then both the Fleets engaged from four in the afternoon till it was dark, and though there were not less than two thousand shot of Cannon exchanged on one side and the other, the loss of men was not great, and the greatest was of the Hollanders, of whom one Ship was sunk, and another taken, and about an hundred and fifty men slain; the English had not any Ship disabled, and very few men killed. Van Trump drew his Fleet in the night to the back of Goodwin Sands, and the next morning sailed away for Zealand.

The Dutch come off with loss.

The Holland Embassadors at London by their Memorials endeavoured all they could to persuade 1652 swade the Parliament, that this Action of Trump was without the privity or consent of their Masters, and thereupon demanded a restitution of the Ship taken by Blake in the fight; but the people at London were so inflamed with the news of the fight and Trump's carriage in it, that they insisted not on that demand, and the Parliament was necessitated to appoint a Troop of Horse to guard the Embassadors from the rage and fury of the multitude.

The States apprehended this business might cause a Rupture betwixt them and the English, and therefore they dispatched the Heer Pau to England in the Quality of an Embassador Extraordinary, who was so very well received at his arrival at London, that he believed he should not only extinguish the flame already kindled, but perfect that Negotiation formerly treated on by the other Embassadors. But in this he was much deceived, for when he and the other Embassadors had jointly presented a Paper to the Parliament to excuse the late enterprize of Trump, they returned an answer that did not at all content them, for they peremptorily required, To be paid and satisfied for all the Charges and Damages they had been put to and sustained by the preparations of the States General, and other attempts this Summer, before they would treat on any other proposition. The States of the United Provinces being advertised of this proceeding, immediately recalled their Embassadors, and thereupon the War was vigorously prosecuted on both parts, and in a very little time Van Trump was again at Sea with an hundred and twenty sail of men of War; but he got not out soon enough to prevent General Blakes sailing Northward with seventy sail of Ships of War to interrupt the Dutch fishing-Trade, and look for five Dutch East-India Ships which were at that time expected to return home that way.

Trump out again at Sea with an 120 Sail.

In the mean time about the 6th of June Sir George Ascough arrived in the Downs with the Barbadoes Fleet, consisting of 15 Men of War, having taken in his way ten Dutch Merchant-Ships and four men of War, one whereof was a Ship of Advice, to give notice to their Merchant-Ships of their present differences.

The Parliament upon his arrival sent Orders to him to stay there, till a Fleet then providing in the Thames should be made ready to joyn with him.

Trump having intelligence thereof, about the beginning of July clapt in with part of his Fleet between Sir George and the River, and sent the other part Westward to prevent his going that way, resolving either to surprize those coming out of the Thames, or to sink and disperse those with Sir George Ascough; but the Governour of Dover gave so speedy advice of the posture of the Enemy, that the Navy in the River moved not, and then Trump on the eighth of July made towards Sir George to assail the Fleet, but the wind failing, they came to an Anchor a League off, and before the next Ebb, the Militia of that Country was ready upon the Coast, and Sir George his ships well re-inforced with men, and a Platform was cast up betwixt the Castles of Deal and Sandown, whereon good store of Cannon were planted to receive 1652 them, but at the next Ebb whilst they were under sail the wind came about South-West, and blew so directly in their teeth, that they could not possibly make in to them.

Trump upon this disappointment, returned to Holland, to convey several Merchant-men for the Northern and Eastern Trade, that lay ready for him; with which he sailed towards the Sound, and in his way he received advice, that Blake had spoiled and dispersed their Herring-Fishing, and taken twelve Men of War that guarded them, and was with his Fleet in Harbour about the Isles of Orkney, wherefore he sent part of his Ships to guard the Merchant-men on their Voyage, and with the rest he sailed to find out Blake, having met in his way the five East-India Ships, but when he came near those Northern Islands, such a storm arose, that he was forced to put to Sea, and his Fleet was so scattered, that he came home but with two and forty sail, and three of the East-India ships, but shortly after the other two East-India ships, and all the Fleet, except six, came home in safety; and Blake came safe to Yarmouth with all his Fleet and six of Trump's Frigots, which he had met with, and nine hundred Prisoners.

In this time Sir George Ascough had got a Fleet together of about forty sail, with which he sailed to Plymouth to secure our Merchant-ships homeward bound, where there safely arrived five ships from the East-India's, and two from the Straights; Whilst Sir George lay there, De Ruyter was passing that way with a Fleet of fifty men of War to convey about the like number of Merchant-ships that way: about two in the afternoon on the 16th of August the English Fleet got sight of the Enemy, and De Ruyter sent away his Merchant-ships, and made ready for the fight, and about four, Sir George with nine of his headmost ships charged through the Dutch Fleet, and got the Weather-gage of them, and charged them again, but the rest of his Fleet being Merchant-men, and not coming up, and the night being already entred, both Fleets drew off from each other; the Dutch into one of the French Ports, and Sir George to Plymouth to mend and repair the damages of the Fleet; Captain Peck his Rear-Admiral lost his Leg and soon after died, and several other Captains were wounded, but not one ship lost; what loss of men the Dutch sustained was not known, but none of their ships were disabled.

Sir George Ascough and De Ruyter's engagement at Plymouth being the second combat with the Dutch.

Van Trump was at this time very much discontented upon some rumours spread of his failure of conduct in the last expedition, so that he desired the States that he might leave his charge and retire; the States seemed very unwilling to comply with his request, but at last they consented to it, and Wit Wittens was appointed in his place, to whom De Ruyter was joyned in Commission. These two Commanders made what speed they could to get their Fleet to Sea, and in October they made their stations on the side of the North Foreland; Blake as soon as he had notice thereof hastened with his Fleet towards them, having been on the Western Coast to Convey some Merchant-ships homewards, and taken in his way five Dutch West-India ships of great value, and six Straights-men, valued at two hundred thousand pounds.

He divided his Fleet into three Squadrons, one commanded by himself, the other by Penne the Vice-Admiral, and the third by Rear-Admiral Bourn, and the 28th of October the Fight was begun by Bourn, and seconded immediately by the whole Fleet, wherein great Courage was shown on both sides, the Rear-Admiral of the Dutch was boarded and taken, and two more of their Ships were sunk, and one blown up, so that Wit Wittens was glad to give over the conflict, and to ply his Sails to get off, being pursued by the English Fleet within twelve Leagues East South-East of the Maze, and he with the remainder of his torn and much shattered Ships came into Goree. The English preserved all their Ships, though many of them were much battered, and Blake came in Triumph into the Downs.

The Dutch were much troubled at the loss of this Combat, which was by Wittens imputed to the Cowardize of some of his Commanders, & the advantage of the English ships over them in number and strength.

But nevertheless the States thought it not convenient to hazard another Combat till they had a more sufficient Fleet than before, both in the goodness and strength of their ships, and the number also.

Both they and the English in the first beginning of the War had sent to the Swedes and Danes to invite them to their Party, because the Materials for shipping came from the Seas where these Princes had the chief Dominion; the Swedes were very favourable to us, and at last would be Neuters, if not Partakers with us, and the Queen sent hither Monsieur Spiering her Embassadour, who died shortly after his arrival at London, and after his death Monsieur Appleboom succeeded: but the Danes declared for the States of the United Provinces against us. And about this time their King sent a Message to them, that he was ready to succour them with twenty good ships of War, provided they would re-establish Trump in his late Employment as Admiral. The States were very willing to comply with this Proposition, and Trump was again prevailed with to re-assume his former charge.

Levant.

In the Levant Captain Badily with four or five English Frigots was set upon by Van Galen, who commanded a Fleet of 16 Sail of Dutch Men of War in those Seas, in which encounter the Phoenix was taken by the Dutch, and the rest of our ships were forc'd to retire under the protection of the Port of Longone; but Van Galen bought this Victory with the loss of his Life, and the Phoenix was on the twentieth of November regain'd by the valour of Captain Cox a former Lieutenant to the same ship.

Van Trump being restored to the Office of Admiral, was very industrious to give a proof of his courage in some valiant Enterprize; and to that purpose having got together Eighty Men of War, and Ten Fire-ships, he sailed directly to the backside of the Goodwin, near the place where the former Battel was fought. Blake was in the Downs with few more than Forty sail, but was nevertheless resolv'd not to refuse an Engagement, and for that purpose he hoys'd his sailes to find out Trump, and sent out seven ships to discover his Fleet, which were met by nine of the Dutch ships sent out on the same Errand. These began the Fight with their Cannon, and immediately the two Admirals advanced at the Head of their Squadrons, and the Fight was very furious, and lasted from the two in the Morning on the twenty ninth of November, Old Style, till six in the Evening. The Triumph, wherein Blake himself was, with the Victory and Vanguard bore most of the stress, being engaged at one time with twenty of the best Dutch ships, and though it was long doubted on which side the fortune of the day would turn, yet at last the numbers of the Dutch drew it to that side, with the loss of the Garland and Bonaventure which were taken, and of one that was burnt, and three sunk; and indeed had not the Night been favourable to our retreat, the whole Fleet might have been in much danger. But the Dutch could not much boast of this Victory; for they lost many men, and one of their Flag-ships was blown up, and all the Mariners and Souldiers therein lost, except two; and the ships of Van Trump and De Ruyter were much damaged.

Blake defeated in the Downs

Blake after this defeat drew his shattered Fleet into the River of Thames to be repaired, and it is said, Trump triumphantly sailed through the Channel with a Broom on his main Topmast, pretending to sweep the Channel of all English shipping; and having sent home all his disabled ships, after some little stay about Guernsey and the Western Parts, he arrived at the Isle of Rhe to stay there for a Fleet of Merchants ships which were to be convoy'd homewards. In the mean time all possible care was used by the English States to equippe a Fleet to meet him as he return'd, and General Monk was added to the number of the Generals at Sea, and General Dean being newly arriv'd from Scotland, was order'd to go to Sea with Blake and Monk; so that under the joynt Command and Conduct of these three Generals, the War at Sea was to be managed.

The expence of this War made this Parliament contrive all ways they could to husband their Treasure, and because they thought the entertainment of the Duke of Gloucester (whom since the murder of the late King they had kept at the Isle of Wight) too great an expence, they resolv'd to send him abroad, and about the beginning of February they sent him with two Servants to Dunkirk, promising to allow him a small Exhibition for his maintenance, if he would not come near his Brother, nor any of his Relations.

The Parliament solicits the Queen of Sweden to espouse their interest.

Monsieur Bourdeaux sent Agent from the French King to the English States.

The King reconciles the differences between the King and Princes of France.

The English Fleet out at Sea again.

The King of Denmark's Confederacy with the States of Holland made the Parliament very solicitous to draw the Queen of Sweden to their interest, but she continued in a resolution of Neutrality, and offered her Mediation for a Peace betwixt the two States, which yet took no effect; but the Dutch to strengthen their party, were very earnest with the French by their Ambassadour Boreel at Paris to conclude a League Offensive and Defensive with that Crown, and herein they doubted not to succeed, because the English were in a kind of Hostility at this time with the French. For, about the later end of August in this year, some of the Parliaments Frigots had taken seven of the King of France his Ships which were going to the relief of Dunkirk, then besieged by the Arms of Spain, by which means that Town came into the hands of the Spaniards: But the reputation of the English Commonwealth was at this time so great, that Cardinal Mazarine, who then managed the Affairs of France, endeavoured rather an Accommodation with them than otherwise; so that the Dutch missed of their purposes in that Negotiation, and about the month of December Monsieur De Bourdeaux was dispatched as Agent from the King of France to acknowledge the English State. This action of the French at this time was looked on with much reflection by those that were Friends to the Crown of England; for our King had by his excellent wisdom and address newly composed the Civil Commotions of that Kingdom, wherein the Princes of the Blood had possessed themselves of Paris, and begun and formed a great Party against the King, demanding to have the Cardinal banished, and several real or pretended Grievances redressed, and so formidable were they grown, that the Cardinal withdrew himself to Colen for fear of them, and the Duke of Lorraine was on their behalf entred into the Bowels of France with an Army, whereby a great effusion of Blood had ensued if his Majesty's Mediation had not prevented it; by which the Crown of France was not only raised to a great lustre, but the Cardinal, whose Fortune was by most men judged desperate, was with the Peace restored to his former Authority and Greatness.

The States of Holland having advice that the Parliament was equipping a Fleet to be put to Sea under their three Generals, sent an express to Trump (then at Rhe) to hasten away with what Merchant-men were ready, and to block up the River of Thames to prevent their going out; Trump upon receiving this Order made what haste he could; but contrary to the expectation of the States, and even to their amazement, on the eighth of February, the English Generals set sail from Queenborough with sixty sail of Men of War, to which on the eleventh of the same month twenty Sail more joyued from Portsmouth, and with this Fleet they sailed over against Portland, where they lay cross the Channel half Seas over to discover the Dutch Fleet; on Friday the eighteenth of February by break of day the Southermost ships of the English descried the Dutch, consisting (as their own Prints reported) of seventy six men of War, who had the charge of three hundred Merchants Ships to convey homewards.

The English Fleet made what sail they could towards the Enemy, and Van Trump having recollected his ships of War, prepared to receive them, and about eight in the Morning, the Triumph, wherein Blake and Dean were, with twelve ships more (for the rest of the Fleet could not get up) engaged Board and Board with the grofs of the Dutch Fleet, and the Triumph was hardly put to it, having received seven hundred Cannon-shot in her Hull, but was gallantly relieved by Lawson Commander of the Fairfax. By this time the whole English Navie came up, and a furious fight ensued betwixt the two Fleets, which continued till the Night parted them.

The Ship wherein General Monk commanded, being a slow sayler, could not perform so much as he desired, but he lost many Men, and had as great a share in the Fight as any of her condition. The Triumph and Fairfax being enclosed by the greatest of the Holland ships, had in each an hundred killed and wounded, and Blake received a hurt in his thigh with a piece of Iron which a shot had driven out, and Ball the Captain thereof was slain, together with Sparrow the Secretary. The Prosperous, a ship of four and forty Guns, was boarded by the Dutch, but recovered by the Merlin Frigot, Captain Mildmay of the Vanguard was killed; the English lost not a ship in this Fight, but had many disabled: but six Men of War of the Dutch were taken and sunk, whereof one was a Flag-ship, and it is said, that most of the Officers in Trumps ship were killed or wounded, and many of the Mariners. Such of the English Fleet as were disabled got into Portsmouth, and the wounded men were set on shore, and on Saturday Morning the Dutch Fleet was again discerned seven Leagues off Weymouth, and over against Dungeness, whither the English plied; and in the Afternoon both fleets engaged with so much fury, that they were quickly environed with flame and smoke. Trump had put his Merchant-men before him, and after the first shock, he drew off and fought retreating towards Bulloign, and in his way thither the English Frigots at large took many of his Merchants ships, and Lawson boarded a Dutch Man of War, and brought her off. The next day early in the Morning the Fight was renewed, which continued very fierce till four in the Afternoon, but the wind being cross to the English at North North-East, Trump got to Calice Sands, and there anchored, and thence tided it home.

The Dutch lost in these three days Fight eleven Men of War, and thirty Merchants Ships, and by the calculation of their own Prisoners, they had no less than fifteen hundred men kill'd; but of the English, though many ships were shattered, there was but one sunk named the Sampson, but Captain Button the Commander thereof (though much wounded) and most of the Men were saved. The number of the English slain is not reported, but by the best conjecture that could be made, they were not much less than those of their enemies.

The Dutch beaten in this Fight.

1652 This Year died the Lady Eleanor Davys, whose Prediction concerning the late Duke of Buckingham's Death, was thought remarkable enough to be commemorated by several Writers of the History of those Times, amongst the Presages that threatned the untimely end of that Great Man: And this coming from a Person of her Quality, was so much the more subject of Critical Discourse and Censure among the Wits of those Times; and whence, perhaps, some later Observers have taken Aim: but, since common Fame in these cases is ever apt to take things upon trust, and for want of due examination, to fix reproach as soon upon the best as the worst, it may much conduce to the rectifying of misinformed Judgements, and the vindicating of the Memory of so Vertuous a Lady from the injurious reflexions of unwary Writers, to give this faithful account of her:

She was the fifth Daughter of the Lord George Audley Earl of Castlehaven, and was married to Sir John Davys the Kings first Serjeant at Law in England, and sometime Attorney General in Ireland (whose Worth his own Learned Writings, and the known Credit he had with his Prince, sufficiently speak) by whom she was the Mother of one only Daughter, Lucy, who was married to Ferdinando late Earl of Huntingdon, and (by her) Grand-mother to the present Earl. As for her Character, there needs little more to be said (since nothing can be more advantageously) than to repeat what hath been delivered of her by the Elegant Pen of the Learned Doctor Du Moulin: She was (saith he) Erudita supra sexum, Mitis infra sortem: Learned above her Sex, Humble below her Fortune, having a Mind so great and Noble, that Prosperity could not make it remiss, nor her deepest Adversity cause her to shrink, or discover the least pusillanimity, or dejection of Spirit; for being full of the Love of God, to that fulness, the smiling World could not add, nor the frowning from it detract. Hence as from a Living Spring, flowed a full Stream of Christian Graces, redounding to the benefit of many, as well as to her own comfort. She had a fineness of Wit, but so temper'd with Prudence and Consultation, that she early addicted her self to serious Speculation, and the Study of Divine Truths. Wherefore, since our Saviour bids us examine (especially in these Cases) the Tree by the Fruit, we recommend it to the consideration of the Judicious, whether a Person so qualified and so addicted, might not with most equity be judg'd on this occasion, to have been favoured with some beam of a Divine Knowledge of future things: Certain it is, that not only in the above mentioned, but in divers other Events both of private and publick Concernment, her Predictions proved undoubtedly true. In the most flourishing condition of the Nation, she foretold its unparallel'd Troubles, and in the depth of those Troubles she foretold that happy Restauration to Peace and Settlement which we at this day (through the Mercy of God) enjoy under our most Gracious Sovereign, and in every one she long before prefix'd the time of their accomplishment.

This busie Year ended with the safe arrival of Prince Rupert with the Swallow, and a prize laden with Tobacco, and a little Frigate at Nantes in Britany, from the Carib Islands. He had been sometime in those Seas with seven or eight Ships, and his Brother Prince Maurice with him, endeavouring to give what annoyance he could to the Enemies of the Crown of England in those parts, till some serviceable occasion might render him more favourable elsewhere; but the said strokes of adverse Fortune, which yet eclipsed the Royal Throne of England, did even in those distant parts pursue this Illustrious Pair of Princes, and by the violence of a Hurricane, the life of one of them (the valiant Prince Maurice) was taken away; a person who in our unhappy Civil Wars gave eminent proof of as much courage and generosity as any one man could be Master of, than whom death has left few worthier behind, to dignifie the World with Actions of Glory and Renown. Prince Rupert at his first arrival fell sick, but upon his recovery he was invited to Paris, and complemented by the King of France, and cordially welcomed by the King our Sovereign; where now almost the whole Royal Family were met together.

It is commonly observed, that it is easier much to obtain a Conquest than secure it; and in nothing was this more visible than in the present posture of Affairs in England, where the New Commonwealth now advanced to as great prosperity and security as their ambitious hopes could aim at, having, together with the death of the late King, as much as in them lay, even buried and eradicated Monarchy it self, began to sink under its own weight, and by intestine divisions at home, to meet that ruine, which all the strength and power of their Enemies abroad, and their Confederates could not reach to.

The Officers of the Army who effected this change, had met in Council some Months before in meditation of altering the Government; and these being of two Parties, and of different interests, it was scarce believed they could agree in the design. Harrison, who was one of the Heads of that Party at this time, known by the name of the Sect of the Fifth Monarchy, had gained a great part of the Inferiour Officers, and these were so much intoxicated with that Notion, that they never could approve of any Government; but where (as they said) Christ was to Rule, which, as they explained, (was a Dominion to be exercised by Saints under him) Men of such Holy and Sanctified Lives, that nothing but Plenty and Happiness could be expected from their Government, and to such, all Offices of Trust and Power, Military and Civil were to be committed, and of this sort they resolved to chuse by nomination a new Representative. Cromwell mingled with these Zealots in this projection, knowing the inconsistency of their intentions, and that the Reins of Power would be by them managed (as the Poets feigned Phaeton's conduct of the Chariot of the Sun) to set the World in a flame, and introduce such confusion as would necessitate his taking to himself the Government to rescue his party from destruction.

To this answer was made by the Officers, That they could not expect any good Fruits to the People of God from this Parliament, wherein there was so great a Party of Carnal Men of corrupt Principles, that the persons by their Authority to be chosen would be of the like temper and spirit as they are, and joyn with them in perpetuating themselves in the Supreme Government: Concluding, That the people of the Land, who were distinguishable from the people of God, were not yet to be trusted with the choice of their own Representatives: But they (they said) would take care to devolve the Supreme Authority upon known persons fearing God, and of approved integrity. This reasoning on both sides tended to make the breach wider, but the Parliament in the mean time went on according to their own purpose, and prepared an Act for the settling of Qualifications of Members to fill up their House, wherein such speed was made, that on the twentieth of April the Question was ready to be put to pass it into a Law, when Crommel, Lambert, Harrison, and some eight Officers more of the Army, by intelligence with some of their Members, entred the House, and after a short Speech spoken by Crommel, shewing some reasons for the necessity of their Dissolution, he declared them dissolved, and required them to depart, but the Speaker would not leave the Chair, till by Harrison taken out by the Arm; and Crommel commanded the Mace to be taken away, and not any more to be carried before him, and then they caused the Doors of the Parliament House to be locked, and placed a good guard thereon to prevent the assembling of the Members.

This Revolution could not but be very pleasing to the King, for now the Stone was rowling in all probability it would not fix (as in the sequel it appeared) till that just Government should be attained under which this Kingdom had enjoyed as much happiness, for many Centuries of years, as any Nation in the World.

A Council of State constituted.

The first thing done by these Officers after this change, was to constitute a Council of State consisting of the Chief Officers of the Army, and such of the late Parliament as were their Confederates, in whom the Supreme Authority was placed, and till a Representative should be chosen, all obedience was required thereunto as fully as when the Parliament was sitting, and all Judges, Sheriffs, Justices of Peace, Mayors, Bayliffs, and other Civil Officers and Publick Ministers whatsoever were to proceed in their respective Offices and Places, and Writs were to run in the Style of the Keepers of the Liberty of England as before.

The Dutch thought to profit themselves by this alteration, and made all possible haste to get out their Fleet, but our new Governours omitted nothing that might advance their Maritime preparations. And the first thing they did after their establishment, was to make an Ordinance for the raising of six Months Assessment from the twenty fourth of June ensuing, which was readily obeyed, because it exacted not so great a sum as the last Acts of Parliament for Assessments. A fix months Tax settled.

Whilest these things were in Action, all Officers and Souldiers in England, Scotland, and Ireland, and all the Officers in the Fleet were practised on to approve of the Armies proceedings, and did comply therewith, so that no Commotion followed in any part upon this mutation of Government.

The next considerable matter that occur'd, was a Naval Combat betwixt the Dutch Fleet under Trump assisted with De Ruyter, Wit Wittens, and the two Everfons, consisting of 104 Men of War, 12 Galliots, and nine Fire-ships; and the English Fleet under the Command of General Monk and General Dean who were both in one Ship) assisted by Penne the Vice-Admiral, and Lamson Rear-Admiral, consisting of 100 ships of all sorts. It was about eleven of the Clock at Noon on the second of June that both the Fleets engaged, that at the first Broad-side of the Enemy, Dean was shot almost off in the middle by a Cannon-Bullet, as he stood by General Monk; but he without any disturbance was so present to himself, that he caused him to be removed, and prosecuted the Battel with great Resolution, without any further notice of the accident. The noise and Thunder of the Cannon was very great, and had been very deplorable to both Parties, if a sudden calm had not abated the fury of the Fight for some time after it began; but after two hours such a fresh gale of Wind arose, that the Fight was renewed in so violent a manner, that it continued with very little intermission whilst there was any light; Lamson pressed so hard upon De Ruyter with his Squadron, that he had carried him, if Trump had not come into his relief, but he could not prevent Lamson's sinking a Ship of Holme of 42 Guns, that had in her a hundred and forty men; the General with his Squadron was in the thickest of them, and greater execution had been done, but that the Wind blew cross to the English, and so favoured their Enemies, that they bore away before it. The next morning early General Monk found himself near them, but the Wind was so slack, he could not come up till Noon to engage their Fleet, but then the Combat was begun with greater vigour than at any time before, and continued till ten at Night; ninety of Trumps Fleet in the heat of the Engagement were in so great confusion, and so unwilling to stand to the Fight, that he fired upon them, and sent his Boat to Command them to come up to him, but nothing he could Trump engaged by Gen. Monk and Dean: which was the fifth Sea Fight.

Gen. Dean slain in the fight.

1653 Trump defeated. could do or say, could persuade more than twenty of them to return, the rest steered away East and by South, but the Wind being fresh Westwardly, the General press'd so hard upon them, that he sunk six of their best Ships, and two were blown up amongst their own Fleet, and eleven Ships and two Hoyes were taken, and thirteen hundred and fifty Prisoners, whereof six were Captains of very good note, and of the Ships one was a Vice-Admiral, and two were Rear-Admirals.

At the end of this days Fight, General Blake came in with eighteen fresh Ships, and if the Dutch had not been upon the Flats of Dunkirk and Calice, whereby our great Ships could not get up to them, most of their Fleet had been ruin'd or taken. The English had not one Ship lost or disabled, and, except General Dean, but one Captain slain.

Van Trump imputed this overthrow to the ignorance and unskillfulness of his Captains, but his Masters were so humbled by it, that a resolution for Peace was immediately taken up, and a Vessel with a white Flag, and a Messenger to prepare a way for two Embassadors, was sent into England.

The Council of Officers had now agreed upon the several persons all over England (who were the most sanctified Creatures they could nominate) to form a Representative, and a Summons was sent to every one of them in the name of Oliver Cromwell Captain General of all the Forces, &c. to take upon them the trust to which they were summoned, and to meet at White-hall to that purpose on the fifth of July then next coming.

The New Parliament summoned.

These according to the respective Summons assembled at the time appointed, and went to Westminster to the Parliament House; and chose one Rouse a Cornish-man (made by the late Parliament Provost of Eaton) to be their Speaker, and appointed several Committees in the manner as other Parliaments used to do, to make their business easie to them.

The Dutch in this Conjunction had underhand made Overtures of a Peace to Cromwell, which was not ill received, but that they might make it on better terms, they were resolved once more to try their Fortunes at Sea, to regain their lost Reputation; and in order thereunto, they prepared a Fleet to the number of an hundred and twenty five Sail, with so much confidence of success, that they posted Van Trump out with 95 ships before the rest were ready, which were to be brought to him by Witt Wittens from the Texel.

It was upon the 29th of July in the Morning when the English Fleet of about 106 Ships descried the Dutch, they had time to draw together, and divided their Fleet into four Squadrons, (viz.) the first under Trump, the second under Vice-Admiral Everson, the third under Rear-Admiral Fioris, and the fourth under Witt Wittens for a Reserve.

1653 The English Fleet was commanded by General Monk in Chief, having Penne for his Vice-Admiral, and Lawson Rear-Admiral; Blake was discomposed in his health, and not with the Fleet, the English were all a-stern, and could not get up till six of the clock to come to any Engagement, and then it was begun with a few of the nimblest Frigots, which were afterwards re-inforced to the number of thirty, who continued the Battel till the night parted them, though the rest of the Fleet could not get up to joyn with them.

and Trump, being the sixth combat.

The Dutch by the darkness of the night sent away many of their main'd disabled Ships, and got by the English Fleet to joyn with the twenty five Ships that Wittens brought to them, which much encouraged the rest to renew the Fight, in hopes to be reveng'd of their late affront; and now both Fleets met in the most fierce and cruel Fight that ever was fought, (General Monk observing this War to be very burthensome to the Nation, thought the best way of ending it to be in the sharpness of it, and therefore gave Orders to all his Captains, neither to give nor take Quarter; for he had found by experience, that the taking of Ships oblig'd him always to send other Ships off with them, and so the Fleet became weakned,) the Air was quickly fill'd with scattered Limbs of men blown up; the Sea was died with the Blood that flowed from the Veins of the slain and wounded. Witt Wittens and Everson did bestir themselves, and often attempted to board the Ship in which the General himselfe was: Cornelius Everson's ship was sunk, and he taken, and the famous Van Trump himselfe standing upon the Poop of his ship with his drawn Sword encouraging his men, was slain with a Musquet-Bullet; whereby the rest of the Fleet was so discouraged, that they hoysted out all the sail they could to haste away towards the Texel: The English pursued little, (having bought the Victory at a dear rate) but tack'd about to Sole-Bay, there to repair their shattered ships, and dispose of their Prisoners, whereof five were Captains, viz. Everson, Zanger, Fomeen, Scotten, and D'Hayes, and about 1200 Common men, by the mercy and compassion of the English taken out of Boats, and swimming in the Sea; Thirty three sail of Ships, out of which they were sav'd, was sunk to the bottom of the Ocean, and in regard that these Prisoners were belonging to so many lost Ships, by this means the number of them was known; but it is supposed that some were sunk, out of which no men were saved. The English lost 400 Common men, and eight Captains, Graves, Peacock, Taylor, Crisp, Newman, Cox, Owen and Chapman, men of great resolution; and had about 7000 wounded, whereof five were Commanders, but they lost but one ship, which was called the Oak.

Van Trump was a man of so great Courage and Experience in Maritime Affairs, that he justly merited the fame of being the most Renowned Sea-Captain of this Age, and perhaps there were few better at any time before. He was a Person of much Vertue, Honour, and Fidelity, and a great lover of his Countrey, which made him bear a grateful respect to the House of Orange, by whom the foundation was laid of that (High and Mighty) greatness they now assume and enjoy; and by whose cter of Van Trump.

1653 Prudence and Courage their Liberties were rescued and preserved against one of the most potent Princes of Europe. Out of his great sense of Honour, he had much commiseration for the sufferings of our Royal Family, and did endeavour to persuade his Masters to espouse the Kings Interest, as that to which they were in Justice and Conscience obliged to adhere, and though he was without success in that undertaking, he omitted not on all occasions to testify his affections to his Majesty.

The War was not only prosecuted in those great fights, but in all parts of the World where the Trade of the Two Nations was used, the ships of each engaged one the other, & many sore conflicts were made in several places; but because the particular description of these encounters would swell this Treatise to too large a bulk, we do omit the doing thereof.

This new Parliament (for so for distinction we must call it) began to be so troublesome in their consultations, that the whole Nation, and the most of those Army Officers that named them, grew wearier of them than those that were before removed; for they were so Seraphical and Notional in their debates, that the whole Magistracy and Ministry was to be so modelled, as would make the Government ridiculous; but the Ministry and the Maintenance thereof by Tythes was that they most arraigned as an Antichristian Constitution; so that now all things succeeded to Cromwell's expectation, and their dissolution was earnestly pressed to save a threatened confusion in Government, if they continued in Authority; and of this some amongst themselves were so sensible, that Rouse the Speaker on the twelfth of December acquainted the House, that their sitting was no longer necessary, and being seconded by some others privie to the intention, he rose from the Chair, and went out of the House with the Mace before him, and with as many as would follow him (being the major part of the Members) he came to White-hall, and there resigned to Cromwell the Instrument by him formerly delivered to them at their first sitting; Harrison and some few staid in the House after the rest went, but were quickly dispersed by a party of Souldiers sent to dissolve them.

About four days after, the Officers of the Army had prepared an Instrument or Systeme of Government, on which the foundation of a new Dominion was to be erected, and they entreated Oliver Cromwell to accept of the Government under the Title of Protector of the Commonwealth of England, Scotland and Ireland: He at first seemingly refused the Dignity; but when the exigence of Time and necessity of Affairs were laid open to him, he did accept of it, and was that day at one in the afternoon install'd at Westminster in manner following:

The Protector install'd. He came from White-hall to the Chancery Court in Westminster-hall, attended by the Lords Commissioners of the Great Seal, the Barons of the Exchequer and Judges in their Robes, and after them the Counsel Learned of the Commonwealth, and the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Recorder of 1653 London in their Scarlet Gowns, then came the Protector attended with many of the chief Officers of the Army; there was a Chair of State set in the Court, and the Protector stood by it, till the Instrument of Government was read; then the Oath was administered to him, which he took in the following words:

I promise in the presence of God, not to violate or infringe the Matters and Things contained in the Instrument, but to observe and cause the same to be observed; and in all things to the best of my understanding, Govern the Nation, according to the Laws, Statutes, and Customs thereof: and to seek their Peace, and cause Justice and Law to be equally administered.

Having subscribed this Oath and the Instrument, he sat in the Chair of State, and put on his Hat, and the Lords Commissioners of the Great Seal delivered up the Seal to him, and the Lord Mayor his Sword and Cap of Maintenance, all which he respectively returned to them again; and then the Protector in the same manner as he came, returned to White-hall. To publish the Instrument of Government is not very necessary, and will be too long, but some Heads thereof are here inserted:

The Heads of the Instrument of the Protector's Government.

1. A Parliament to be called every three years.
2. The first to Assemble on the third of September, 1654.
3. No Parliament to be dissolved till it have sat five Months.
4. Such Bills as are offered to the Protector by the Parliament, if he assent not in twenty days, to be Laws without him.
5. That his Council shall not exceed the number of one and twenty, nor be less than thirteene.
6. That immediately after the death of the present, and succeeding Protectors, the Council shall chuse another before they rise.
7. No Protector after the present, shall be General of the Army.
8. The Protector shall have power to make War and Peace.
9. That in the Intervals of Parliament, the Protector and his Council may make some Laws that shall be binding to the Subject.

The first Council chosen in pursuance of this Instrument, were,

Col. Edward Mountague.
Col. John Lambert.
Philip Lord Viscount Lisle.
Col. John Desbrow, newly made also one of the Generals at Sea.
Sir Gilbert Pickering.
Sir Anthony Ashly Cooper.
Sir Charles Woolsey.
Major Gen. Skippon.
Walter Strickland, Esq;
Col. William Sydenham.
Col. Philip Jones.
Francis Rouse, Gent.
John Lawrence.
Richard Major, Esq;

The

1653 The first Act of these Counsellors after their establishment was a Proclamation notifying the Government, with a direction therein, That all Judges, Sheriffs, Justices of the Peace, Mayors, Bayliffs, and all other pulique Officers, and Ministers whatsoever within this Commonwealth or any part thereof, do proceed in their respective places and offices till further Order to the contrary.

The States of the United Provinces were brought into so low condition by the two last fights, and their people so much dispirited, that a general Revolt was feared in the Provinces; nevertheless they put as good a Countenance as they could on their condition, and chose the Heer Opdam to be Admiral of their Fleet in the place of Trump, but thought it more advisable to prosecute overtures of peace than venture another Battel; and certainly if the War had been continued, their Mariners were so baffled, they would very hardly have procured men to furnish a Fleet, and one Battel more might have brought us a blank Paper for our own conditions; but Cromwell was not so well settled in his Throne to hazard any thing, and therefore the Dutch Embassadors, Newport, Youngstal, and Bevering, & Vander Perre were well received by him; and in the beginning of this year they were so diligent in their Negotiation, that on the 5th of April the Articles of Peace were signed in London, and on the 26th of the same month they were proclaimed in London and Amsterdam, and in this Peace the King of Denmark was included.

Opdam supplies the place of Trump.

1654 The Protector concludes a Peace with the Dutch.

For the King of Denmark espousing the interest of the States of Holland, had arrested two and twenty English Ships which were in his Ports, and at their instance confiscated the Merchandizes therein; so that they were obliged to compose that difference, and this was that which had more difficulty than any other matter in the Treaty.

The Articles of the Peace we think not very essential to our History to be inserted at large, but the two which were of most importance, were these, (viz.)

The Men of War and other Ships of Holland meeting the English Ships in the Narrow Seas shall lower their Sayls to them.

The States shall cause restitution to be made by the King of Denmark of all the ships and goods of the English by him seized which are yet undisposed, and a full compensation in value for such of them as had been sold, to be ascertained in a time prefixt by six English Merchants, and six Dutch, who should meet for that purpose.

A Peace with the Queen of Sweden.

And the Spanish Embassadour was as early to congratulate the Protector's Authority: and peace was made with the Queen of Sweden, and the Conde del Sa Lord Chamberlain of the Kingdom of Portugal came in a splendid Embassie to sue for a Peace of him: nor were the French backward to own his power, having given to Monsieur Bourdeaux their Resident here the Quality of Embassador to qualifie him the better for his Negotiation, and added to him the Baron of Bais for a Colleague. Cromwell being now owned by many of the Neighbour Princes and States abroad, and by most of those of his own party at home, thought himself inscure from none but the Royalists, and to give them some terror by his Agents, formed a Plot to draw in some honest credulous persons of that party to their destruction; and in prosecution hereof in the month of May Colonel John Gerard, and his Brother Mr. Col. Charles Gerard, Mr. Phillip Porter, Mr. Peter Vowel, and Mr. Sumerfet Fox were apprehended for a pretended intention to assassinate the Protector, and brought before a High Court of Justice erected for that purpose, proclaimed on the 13th of June following, and sitting on the 31st; before whom they were tried for their lives, and three of them, (viz.) Colonel John Gerard, Mr. Vowel, and Sumerfet Fox were condemned. The last of these was reprieved and pardoned upon his confession of the fact, and craving mercy, but the other two were executed. Mr. Vowel was hanged at Charing-Cross, where with an undaunted spirit, tempered with a Christian constancie and patience, he gave up his life. Colonel Gerard was beheaded on Tower-hill, and died with great courage and Magnanimity. With him upon the same Scaffold suffered the Portugal Embassadors Brother Don Pantalion Sa, who had a-while before made a riot in the New Exchange upon conceit of some affront offered there to him, and killed one Greenway a Gentleman standing quietly at a shop, no opposition being made but by this Colonel Gerard, who was fatally joyned with him in death. The Murder was committed by a Knight of Malta, who escaped; but this Gentleman and four more of the Embassadors Servants being taken (one whereof was an Irish youth,) they were arraigned in Westminster-hall before Judge Roller, and others by special Commission of Oyer and Terminer thereunto appointed; and the Portuguese were tried by a Jury of half English and half Strangers, and the Irish Boy by a Jury of English; they were all found guilty, but none suffered but the above-mentioned Don Pantalion and the Irish youth, who was hanged at Tyburn.

1654 Spain Portugal and France seek Cromwells friendship.

Col. Gerard and others tried before a High Court of Justice.

Col. Gerard and Pantalion Sa beheaded.

Our King had remained in the Court of France, between two and three years, with an expectation sometimes flowing, and sometimes ebbing, of gaining at length some opportunity to recover his Kingdoms; some hopes he had of assistance from several other Princes of the Empire, as the Dukes of Brandenburg, Lunenburgh, Brunswick, &c. as also the Emperour himself, to whom was sent in a decent and Honourable equipage the Lord Wilmot created Earl of Rochester, and his Address received with much civility and respect. Moreover, the Dutch seemed very inclinable to the owning and adopting his Interest in their War with England, and Prince Rupert was designed to have had the Command in his Majesties Name, of a Squadron of their Ships; yet so little speed was made in putting this Overture into act, and so suddenly was the Peace made up between this Nation and them, that whatever they hoped for and expected from them, quickly vanished and came to nothing. His next and more probable expectation was from the Success of those earnest endeavours that were made by the Pope and other

The King's hopes from Foreign Princes and States. The Earl of Rochester sent Embassador to the Emperour.

1654 other Princes, for a Reconciliation between the two Crowns of France and Spain, in which Affair he also interposed himself a most zealous Solicitor, as not doubting but that from the united Forces of two such powerful Monarchs, he should receive considerable assistance: and matters were once in a fair way to a peaceful Conclusion, had not the Politick Reasons of State, as it was thought, of Cardinal Mazarine put a stop to this Grand Work; so that taking his leave of the King of France (and the other Great Ones) from whom he received many Complements and Apologies, he went, accompanied with his Brother the Duke of York, his Cousins Prince Rupert and Prince Edward Palatine, to Chatillon, a House belonging to the Prince of Conde, where they stayed a while to determine how most commodiously each of them should dispose of themselves. The King with Prince Rupert resolved for Germany (the Earl of Rocheſter being at that time with the Emperour at Regensburgh, to solicit in his behalfe;) and the rather, because about that time a general Dyet of the Estates of the Empire was to be held in that City: Prince Edward took his Journey to Bourbon, and the Duke of York remained in France till a good while after the Conclusion of the Peace with England, being Lieutenant-General of the French Kings Army, Commanded in Chief by Marshal Turenne. Prince Rupert parted from the King to go to Hidelburgh, the Chiefe Seat of his Brother Charles Prince Palatine, and thence to the Imperial Court at Vienna, and the King took his Journey by the way of Cambray and Liege to the Spaw, which he made his first place of Residence in Germany. Here his Sister the Princess Royal of Orange met him, and after a few Months stay in this place, accompanied him to Colen, where they were received with great Honour and Magnificence: as they made their entrance into the Town, the great and small Guns were discharged, and the Deputies of the City came in a solemn manner to complement them: the Duke of Newburgh also entertained them very splendidly at his House at Dusseldorp, from whence the Princess of Orange returning into Holland, the King her Brother brought her onward of her way as far as Bedinguen.

The conclusion of the War with Ireland. From the time we left Ireland in so declining a Condition, and so almost lost to his Majesties Hopes, and the Lord Lieutenants endeavours, the most considerable Force that was left, was in Ulster, under the Leading of Emir Mac Mohon Bishop of Cloghor, who (Owen Roe Oneal being dead) succeeded him as General in those Parts, besides the united Forces of Clanrickard, Muskerry, and Castlehaven, and some few Parties that now and then sailed from their Fastnesses; these for a while gave check to the Republicans and Cromwell's Substitutes; till in the end the said Prelate being overthrown (even to the taking of his person mortally wounded in the Fight) by Sir Charles Coot, and Colonel Fenwick; the Lord Muskerry by my Lord Broghil; the Marquess of Clanrickard, soon after a defeat he received at Finagh, forced to lay down his Arms in the Isle of Carrick; the remnant of the Ulster Forces Commanded by the Lord Jinkillen, Colonel O'Rely, and the Mac-Mohons, Relations of the aforesaid Bishop, yielding upon Articles; as likewise did Morroggh O-Brian, having all of them stood it out to the last Extremity: the remaining Towns, Castles, and Forts which held out, as Athlone, Galloway, Ballishannon, Ballimote, the Isles of Arran and Enisbaffen, and other places, were all constrained to surrender themselves to the Conquerers Power; the Marquess of Ormond and the Lord Inchequin, having in time provided for their Safeties, (when they saw things in a desperate condition, and still growing worse and worse) by imbarquing for France, nothing was left but to dispossess and extirpate the vanquish'd, and take possession in their room. Some they removed out of the World by an Itinerant High Court of Justice, which went in Circuit from one place to another, the President whereof was one Justice Donellan an Irish-man, and Cook (notorious for his officiating in another High Court) his assistant. Others were sent out of the Land by the Articles of Transportation, which the Marquess of Clanrickard and others upon their laying down Arms had concluded with them; namely, to have free liberty to go beyond Sea to serve the King of Spain, or some foreign Prince in his Wars: those Inheritors that remained and escaped the High Court, were transplanted to the Province of Connaught, so that there was a large extent of Territory left for the Adventurers and Purchasers of Irish Lands. The main pretence of this foresaid Court which sate at Kilkenny, and thence removed to Waterford, Dublin, Ulster, and other places, was for the Tryal of those that were judged guilty of the Irish Rebellion in One thousand six hundred forty one. The Chief of Quality that suffered, (for there was a number of less note) were Colonel Mac Hugh, Colonel Toole, and Colonel Walter Bagnal, and who was of all the most Eminent as in Quality, so in Crime (had he been judged by a Lawful Authority) as having been one of the principal leading Men in that Insurrection, and likewise one of the chief obstructors of the Union, endeavoured by the Lord Lieutenant to the advantage of his Majesties Service, Sir Philem Oneal, who being taken near Charlemount, tryed and condemned, was hanged and quartered near my Lord Canfields House, at the place where he had caused his Father to be murdered. Thus was Ireland become subjugated to the English Usurpation. And so likewise was Scotland thought to have been at this time, when on a suddain a new Hostility springs up in the Highlands, headed by divers of the Scotch Nobility, who had the most powerful influence in those parts, the Earles of Glencarn, Athol, Seaforth, Kinroule, the Lord Kenmore, the Lairds Mac Renalds, and Mac Cloud, Colonel Montgomery, Sir Mungo Murry, and Sir Arthur Forbes; these having each of them got together their several Parties, were endeavouring to unite into a Body, and so trusted to have been able with a Force not altogether contemptible to have taken the Field against the main Power of the English that were then in Scotland; and 'tis like enough they had speedily effected what they intended, had not the chief Body of them, amounting in all to about 4000 under Glencarn and Kenmore been encountred on the sudden, ill arm'd, ill provided, and in disorder, by Colonel Morgan at Cromar: Glencarn's Army in this Conflict being very much put Glencarn and Midleton defeated in the High- put 1654 put to the rout and dispersed, and himself missing but little of being taken, the rest in little stragling parties were many times met with to their loss: yet were they not for all this so out of heart, but that they again made a shift in some sort to reimbody, and that so much the more confidently, upon expectation of Middletons coming over with Supplies out of Holland; though upon his arrival not long after with Commission to be General, Sir G. Monroe, (who together with the Lord Napier, and Major General Dalyel, landed with Middleton at Uney Ferry) having also Commission to be Lieutenant General; The Highland Levies instead of being re-inforced by these additional forces and supplies were rather weakened and overthrown by the animosities of some of the Scotch Nobility; especially Glencarn stomaching the preference of Middleton and Monroe to the Command of the Army above him, thereupon departed in discontent, and laid down his Arms. Upon the neck of which breaches and defections among them, General Monk (the Dutch War being ended, having no more Work to do at Sea, is sent Commander in Chief into Scotland, and coming upon Middleton at Loughberry, on the twentieth of July, gave him an utter defeat, and thereby put a period to these Highland Agitations, and all further attempts in Scotland, to the disturbance of the then regnant Authority in England.

The General Assembly dissolved by Col. Morgan
The Kirk of Scotland also her self at this time had the wings of her Religious Empire very much clipp'd, if not quite taken away by the dissolution of her General Assembly, which was done by Colonel Morgan, the fore-going year at Aberdeen, where they were assembled, Mr. Andrew Cant and the rest of them in vain protesting against the action: the like disturbance they had afterwards at Edinburgh from Lieutenant Colonel Cottrel.

The Marques of Argyle intercedes for the Liberty of the Church of Scotland
The Marques of Argyle, to keep up his Reputation with the Church of Scotland, seemed much troubled in his mind at this proceeding against the Assemblies, and interceded with the Protector for the liberty of the Church, wherein he had very good success: For Oliver considering that his declining the Kings interest, facilitated the total subjection of Scotland to his Authority, was willing enough to oblige him, by seeming to do that at his request, he determined to do before for the quieting of the minds of the people; the Church of Scotland was therefore indulged with the exercise of Religion, and a great part of their Jurisdiction and Discipline: they were restrained in little more than the power of keeping General Assemblies (their Presbyteries being permitted to convene) and the rigour of Excommunication: For, whereas before persons excommunicated were not excluded from the Communion of the Kirk, but had all their estates confiscated till their Reconciliation. This latter part was not now to be executed; but to please the Ministers for the restraint of their power, the maintenance of Scholars in the Universities of Scotland was increased, and many Priviledges granted to them.

The Government and security of the Kingdom of Ireland, was the next care of the Protector. Major Gen. Lambert was formerly appointed for that Government, and had provided all his equipage to go thither; but Cromwell was jealous, lest his ambition should excite him to gain a party there to establish himself against him: and therefore he artificially contrived to hinder him from going, upon pretence of greater advancement here, and he made him next to himself, Commander in Chief of all the Armies, with an entertainment of ten pounds a day; this done, he constituted his own Son-in-law Fleetwood to be Deputy of Ireland, assisted with 6 Councillours (that is to say) Steel who was after made Chancellor, Pepys one of the Barons of the Exchequer in England, appointed to be Lord Chief Justice of Ireland, Mr. Robert Goodwin of Suffex, Miles Corbet, and the Colonels Robert Hammond, and Matthew Thomlinson.

The King was at Colen when he received the disconsolate News of the disasters in Scotland and Ireland, supported chiefly by that brave and undaunted fortitude, which never failed him in the greatest of his adversity. The Princes of Germany were very kind to him, which made his stay in those parts the more agreeable; and to encrease his comfort, he sent the Marques of Ormond to Paris, to wait on his Brother the Duke of Gloucester to him, whom he more earnestly desired to have near him, lest his youth might be prevailed upon by the subtilty of Arguments, and temptation of Riches and Promotion, to change his Religion; for the King was ever most zealous in the profession of the Protestant Religion in himself and Family, and on all occasions to promote it to his power in others.

A Parliament called According in the late Instrument of Government, wherein it was Articled, That a Parliament should be called every three years, and that the first should begin on the third of September 1654. A Parliament was summoned by Oliver's Writs, chosen after the wonted manner of Election by the peoples voice, and assembled at Westminster at the prefixed time above mentioned, making choice for their Speaker of William Lenthall, Speaker in the Long Parliament: their beginning was somewhat bold, considering the totteringness of their Estate; for at their very first sitting, they began to question the lawfulness of the Power by which they were called, whereupon they were enjoined to sign a Recognition of the Government, as it was settled in a Single Person and a Parliament, before they could be re-admitted to their Seats in the House: this all of them that sign'd (for some refused) had liberty again to take their places; but so little did their proceedings please his Protectorship, that they had scarcely sat full five months (and so long they were to sit by one of the Articles of the Instrument) when he came and dissolved them. A day or two after which, were apprehended Major Wildman, with a Declaration proving the lawfulness and necessity of taking up Arms against Cromwell: and of the Royallists, Sir John Packington, Sir Henry Littleton, and some others, about a new Conspiracy, which Oliver told the Members of his Parliament at the time of his dismissing them, he knew to have been countenanced and abetted, if not in a part promoted by some of them present, he Fleetwood is made Deputy of Ireland.

The Marques of Ormond sent to attend the Duke of Gloucester.

The Members in-joined to sign a Recognition.

The Parliament dissolved.

Sir Henry Littleton, and others committed to the Tower.

1654 whom he could name. And the truth is, there was a foundation laid (by a Combination of the most courageously affected toward their Princes Service throughout the Kingdom, authorized by Commission from his Majesty), of a general rising for him in every County; which had not so quickly and so easily been suppressed, had not Cromwell, sparing for no cost to maintain his Instruments of deceit; for he had his Spies ready hired, not only here but in all corners, such as counterfeiting themselves zealous Royallists, insinuated into their Counsels, and betrayed them, (of which number Sir Richard Willis at last became shrewdly suspected to be one) but even about the Kings person, as appeared by the defection of one Manning, preferred in consideration of his fathers merits (his father was Colonel Manning, slain in his late Majesties Service) to be one of the Kings Secretaries Clerks, whom Colonel Samuel Take, forcing open his Chamber-door, took in the very act of holding Correspondence with Thurloe, Oliver's Secretary, from whom having newly received a Pacquet, and setting himself busily in the returning of Answers, to prevent discovery, he was hastily chewing Papers in his mouth just as the Colonel entred. Thus for a long time had he made it his weekly practice to send Intelligence to the Usurper, of all that was transacted in the Kings Court, and had a large Pension punctually assigned him for his pains; till at length thus fortunately found out, he had the reward of his treachery paid him in a more deserved manner, being by the Kings command, the whole Court beseeching his Majesty to make a publick example of him, shot to death in one of the Duke of Newburghs Castles. This Combination, though it were probably to the very bottom discovered, before the apprehending of the above-named persons; yet so far the design, being generally laid, had taken effect, that in several Counties some small armed parties began to gether into a Body; in Shropshire and Wales some endeavoured to have taken Shrewsbury and Chirk Castle by surprize, but were both prevented; and of those that attempted Shrewsbury, Sir Thomas Harris, who was the chief, was taken Prisoner, and sent up to London.

Mannings discovered treachery for which he is put to death.

The surprize of Shrewsbury endeavoured.

An Insurrection at Salisbury.

And the like in other parts of the Nation suppressed.

Upon Sunday the 11th of March, a party for the King of about 200 entred Salisbury about Midnight, and having seized upon Horses, and taken away the Commissions of the Judges that were upon their Circuit, bended their course towards Cornwal; of which Captain Unton Crook having timely intelligence, pursued them with his own Troop, and at a place called Southmolton in Devonshire overtook them, and after four hours sharp Conflict, tired as they were, and drowsie, and faint for want of sustenance, drove them to a necessity of yielding; yet Penraddock bravely stood it out, till Articles were granted for the Indemnity of him and his Company, which Crook is said to have afterwards perfidiously denied, and left them wholly over to the Courtesie of their Judges: besides 50 common Prisoners, there were taken of the chief Leaders 3 Captains, Penraddock, Jones, and Grove, only Sir Joseph Wagstaff made a shift to escape away. Other Risings there were in Northumberland, and at the Forest of Sherwood in Yorkshire, where five hundred Horse being met, and not finding the Country to come in as they expected, dispersed themselves, and returned to their Habitations. Also at Hexam-Moor in Yorkshire, there was a great Rendezvous of the Gentry of the Country, of whom Sir Henry Slingsby was taken, and Sir Richard Maleverer with much ado escaped.

At Salisbury, Exeter and Chard in Somersetshire many of the West-Rifers were tried by a Commission of Oyer and Terminer, and executed, and particularly at Exeter; Penraddock and Grove were beheaded, Captain Jones was reprieved; besides those who were put to death of the chief Leaders, many Prisons in the West were filled with a number of the common sort of prisoners, till within a little while after that they emptied themselves into Foreign Plantations.

And there hapned about this time an Adventure which served very opportunely for the ridding of Prisons of their furcharging numbers, and the in-employing of a multitude of loose and vagrant people, there having been ever since the Peace with the Dutch, preparations made for the equipping forth of a great and powerfull Fleet, upon an Expedition which was kept very secret, and not made known even to those that went upon it, unless to the Supreme Commanders, till the very last; only it was given out, that the Voyage would be very profitable, and to a place where there was much Gold and store of Riches: In this Service we may well think there would not be wanting enough that would greedily engage themselves; hither all sorts of people flocked, especially those of low and Bankrupt Fortunes, and upon hopes of enriching themselves, run headlong most of them to their ruine; a Fate that commonly attends precipitate Ambition and Covetousness. This Navy setting Sail from Portsmouth on the 27th of December, put in at the Barbadoes on the 28th of January, Venables commanding the Land-Forces, and Pen being General at Sea.

This Year had been sufficiently memorable, if for nothing else, yet for the death of that Famous and Learned Antiquary Mr. John Selden, whose Works are a Monument far more Worthy his Memory, than that in the Inner-Temple Church.

The King of Spain was not ignorant that this great preparation was designed to make some impression on his Dominions in the West-Indies, and after having dispatched expressees into those parts to give them warning thereof, he sent the Marquis of Leda (a person of great reputation in Arms) in a splendid Embassy to the Protector, to divert, or prevent the prosecution of the business: he arrived at London the 22th of May, but had so cold reception and was so much discouraged in his Negotiation, that he quickly returned.

In the mean time the English Fleet set sail from the Barbadoes the 30th of March, and steered its course towards Hispaniola, one of the fairest and richest Islands belonging to the American Dominions of the King of Spain; so that it was by this time apparent enough which way this expedition tended. And whereas it was admired

1654 mired by many, that at that time when no Hostility was declared between this Nation and the Kingdom of Spain, or any defiance bid on either side, we should carry War into his Territories, without any provocation by him first offered. It was alledged, That the Conditions of Peace extended not beyond the Line. This, though it serv'd to stop the mouths of some, yet it could not satisfy the Spaniard, who look'd upon it as an absolute breach: However it were, whether this Expedition were just or not, whether it were undertaken to a pious end, as was pretended, to curb the excessive Pride, and ambitious Usurpation of the Spaniard, and to bring freedom and purity of Religion to those Indians under his Yoke; or, as many are apt to believe, to partake with the Spaniard of some of his Indian Gold, (thinking it too much for one Potentate to ingross so much Treasure to himself,) I shall not undertake to determine. This is most certain, That at the beginning of this Enterprize, it met with a very remarkable Check, (however the War with the Spaniard proved afterwards successful enough) for General Venables, when as he might have landed his men within a very little of Santo Domingo, (the principal Town and Fortrefs of the Island, and which was in a manner deserted by the Garrison Souldiers,) upon sight of the English Fleet; nevertheless, led by I know not what Policy and Interest of his own, and (it is more than suspected) over-rul'd by the Counsels of his Wife, set them ashore ten Leagues Westward of Domingo; whereupon the Spaniards gather'd fresh Courage, and betook themselves again to the defence of Santo Domingo, which they had abandoned. The English landing without opposition, and seeing no Enemy near them, thought themselves safe enough, and were in their minds absolute Lords of the Indies, sharing the Golden Mines among them; when contrary to their expectation, the General causing it to be proclaim'd at the Head of the Army, That none upon pain of Death should plunder any Gold, Plate, or Jewels, or kill any Cattel. This sudden frustration of their Hopes, and the Climates excessive heat, proved the one such a damping to their Spirits, the other such a weakning to their Bodies, that by that time they had marched a most tedious and disconsolate March through thick Woods, in deep scalding Sands, ready to perish with miserable Drought and Thirst for want of Water, (of which they met not with a drop in many miles,) they were brought to such a condition, that they needed not an Enemy to kill them, being already almost dead with faintness and weakness; so that the Spaniards, Negro's, and Molatto's falling upon them, kill'd, with little or no resistance, till they were weary of killing; and those that could make a shift to fly away, found it a sufficient Atchievement for that time, to bring themselves back again safe unto their Ships.

In this Conflict Major General Haines acted the part of a very valiant Souldier, who being shamefully deserted by his own men, and overpowred by his Enemies, was slain stoutly fighting: there fell above six hundred in the Fight, besides what were cut off in stragling parties near as many more; and all this Execution was done by not above sixty of the Enemy. The Remnant of this Naval Army, that they might not be thought to have undertaken so long a Voyage, and of such expectation altogether in vain, possess themselves, with little or no opposition of another Island called Jamaica; which, however not so plentiful and rich a place as that which they at first aimed at, yet with much Industry, and the Supplies that were sent them out of England, they made a shift to make a Habitation of it tolerable enough to abide in, planting themselves at Oristano, the chief, if not only Town thereof, and have kept it ever since.

The first Adviser to this Undertaking, was one Gage a Minister (formerly a Romish Priest) who also undertook to be the chief Guide in this Expedition, as one who by his long time of Travel in those Parts (of which there is a handsome Relation of his extant) was well acquainted with them; and there he ended his days not long after his arrival, reaping little Fruit of his Project.

Whilest the Proceedings in the West-Indies were unprosperous, General Blake had better fortune in the Streights, who coming with his Fleet before Tunis, and sending to the Governour thereof to demand satisfaction for the Depredations committed by his people on the English, and to require the English Captives to be delivered to him, had a contemptuous answer return'd, (viz.) Here are our Castles of Gulletto and Porta Ferina well mann'd and furnished with Ordance, do what you can, we fear you not. And at the same time they mann'd a Line all along the Shore, and planted Guns thereon: Whereupon (after a short Consultation with his Officers) Blake with his great Ships and their Seconds, came into the Bay of Porta Ferina, within Musquet-shot of the Castle and their Line, and fired with such fury upon them (notwithstanding the frequent discharges of sixty great Guns upon his Ships,) that in two hours the Castle was made defenceless, and all their Guns dismounted, and the Stones clattered about their ears; and finding nine of their Ships in the Road, he caused them all to be fired with his long Boats, and in five hours they were consumed. After this brisk Action he sail'd to Algiers and Tripoly, with both which places he made very advantageous Treats, and then came again to Tunis which he found (by this time) willing to submit to what he propos'd.

Notwithstanding the ill success of the several late endeavours for the King, for which so many suffered, it was not much above a Month e're the Earl of Lindsey, the Lord Willoughby of Parham, Newport, Maynard, Faulkland, Lucas, Petre, Sir Frederick Cornwallis, Sir Geoffery Palmer, Sir Richard Wingfield, with divers others, were committed to the Tower, upon suspicion of pretended High-Treason against Cromwell; which yet, went no further than bare suspicion; for they were never brought to a publick Trial.

About the beginning of July, Major Sedgewick went with a Squadron of twelve ships, among 1655 among which was Colonel Humphryes with a Regiment for the supply of those in Jamaica; from whence, in the following Month of August, General Penne returned for England, with a part of the Fleet, the greatest part yet staying behind: and not long after him came over General Venables, leaving in their steads Colonel Fortescue to command the Land Forces, Vice-Admiral Goodson, the Navy. Venables not long after his Arrival, was for his ill management of Affairs in Hispaniola sent to the Tower; from whence, being judged to have failed rather through rash Imprudence, than any sinister Intention, he was at length released.

The Duke of Gloucester willingly obeying the Order of the King his Brother, was come away with the Marquess of Ormond from Paris, and having stayed for some time with his Sister the Princess Royal at the Hague, was at last accompanied by her to the King her Brother at Colen, where she herself also staid with them till after the Fair at Frankford; to which place, they all of them together made a Progress of State and Pleasure, attended by the Marquess of Ormond, the Earl of Normich, the Lord Newburgh, the Lady Stanhope, and Monsieur Hemfleet her Husband, they went by Coach a little beyond Bonne the Archbishops Electoral Seat; the rest of the Journey they went by Water: through every Princes Countrey which they past, they had the chief Officers of State sent to Complement them, and were saluted by the great Guns from all their Towns and Castles, more especially the Prince Elector of Mentz sent his Grand Marshal to invite them to his Court: whereupon the Lord Newburgh was sent back with the Grand Marshal, to desire the Elector to excuse them at present, promising to wait upon him at their return.

Their progress to Frankford.

The Interview between the King and Christina Queen of Sweden.

The King and his Company entertained by the Elector of Mentz.

Being arrived at Frankford, and hearing that Queen Christina of Sweden was coming that way in her Journey into Italy, the King sent one of his Lords to her, expressing his desire to wait upon her, at whatever place her Majesty should be pleased to nominate; the place then appointed for this Interview was Coningstein, a Village near Frankford, in the Electorate of Mentz, where he had first particular Discourse with her himself for half an hour, which past with many Complements and Ceremonies of Civility; next the Duke of Gloucester was admitted, and then the Lords that attended the King. As these Princes came back from Frankford, the Elector of Mentz, renewing his Civilities, provided all manner of accommodation for them, as they passed through his Territories; and meeting them himself a great part of the way, he brought them to one of his Palaces, where he entertained them in a very sumptuous and splendid manner, for the space of two or three days; after which they returned to Colen: four Burgomasters being appointed by the Magistrate of the City to wait upon them, and welcome them home.

An Army having been sent under the Marquess of Pianella, and the Earl of Grinice Commander of the French Forces in Italy, by Charles Emanuel Duke of Savoy, against his Protestant Subjects in the Valleys of Piedmont, upon occasion of some high Displeasure taken against them, and the Souldiers left to their own unbridled Licence, having committed many cruel Outrages and Mafacres upon the poor miserable People; Cromwell taking this opportunity to ingratiate himself with the Protestants abroad, (affecting to be thought the Chief Patron and Protector of those of the Reformation in all Parts,) concern'd and bestir'd himself very vigorously for their Relief; he appointed a solemn day of Humiliation to be kept, and caused a large Contribution to be gathered for them throughout the Nation, and sent his Agents abroad to mediate for them; Mr. Pell to the Protestant Cantons of the Switzers, Mr. Samuel Moorland, and Mr. George Downing to Thurin to the Duke of Savoy, but his Message being slighted by him, he took another course to deal with him, namely, by the Mediation of the King of France, his now great Allie; by whose power and Authority with that Duke, a Pacification was shortly concluded: Though of the large Collection that was made, so scanty a share came to them, (for some they had) that it may be very well suspected, whether self-Charity for the getting of Money, were not as well aim'd at, as Charity ad extra for the bestowing it.

However, it far'd with the Protestants abroad, these at home, viz. the Royallists, because they would not become Oliver's obedient Subjects, are not only not sav'd from Persecution, but persecuted themselves; while, besides other displeasures both toward the Clergy who were prohibited from teaching School, and from having any Benefices, or officiating as Chaplains; and toward the Laity, who were by Proclamation confin'd (such as had ever been in Arms) not to come within twenty miles of London, and disabled from electing or being elected in Parliament, there comes out a two-handed Invention of Cromwell, which serv'd him at the same time to acquire Money to his own Coffers, and to bring them low in their Estates and Power; this was an Order for the Decimation, or tenth part of the Estates of all such as ever had been in Arms either for his late or present Majesty. For the better executing this Project of Decimation, (under colour of securing the Peace of the Commonwealth) for which Orders were set forth toward the latter end of October by Oliver and his Council, is set up the Office of Major Generals Civil, in the nature of Prefects or Governours of Provinces, to curb, watch, and keep in awe the Royallists, and if it were possible to pull down their high Stomachs; they were eleven in number, namely, Kelsey, Goff, Desborough, Fleetwood, Skippon, Whalley, Butler, Berry, Worsley, Lambert, and Barkstead, which last was also Lieutenant of the Tower, each of them having his several Counties allotted to his Government in the nature of Provinces: In which their Principalities they reigned like so many petty Kings, domineering over the Gentry and Nobility, till Cromwell either thinking to do a special Act of Grace by taking off his Masters, or jealous of what their Power in time might come to, easily gives way to his next Parliament to unhorse those whom he himself had so lately mounted.

A debate held at White-hall about the admission of the Jews,

Upon the tendring of certain Proposals to the Protector by Manasseh Ben Israel, a Jewish Merchant, in the behalf of his Hebrew Nation, for their free admission to Trade and exercise of their Religion in England, a Conference was held about it several days at White-hall, by the Members of the Council, and certain Divines of the most Eminent then in esteem: and many Arguments being urged, some for, others against their admission; those against it so far prevailed, that the Proposals took no effect.

An Imbar-go upon the Goods of English Merchants in Spain. Open war with England proclaimed by the Spaniard at Dunkirk.

The Spanish King thinking it in vain to hope for a Conservation of the League on this side the Line, from those whom he judged to have so apparently broke it on the other side, by invading his Island of Hispaniola, began not obscurely to make preparations for War; and to shew that he had entertained thoughts of Hostility, a general Imbar-go was made in Spain of all English Merchants Goods, and many of their persons secured. Hereupon the like was done in England, and there suddenly followed on both sides a denunciation of open War, which by the Spaniard was not long after solemnly proclaimed at Dunkirk.

Articles of Peace between England and France ratified and proclaimed.

The dissolution of the Peace with Spain, was the product of a Peace with France; for there having been long since an Address made to that end from France to the State of England. No sooner did the breach begin between England and Spain, but the French King sends to Monsieur Bourdeaux his Embassadour here to press his Embassie; which he did with so good success, that in a short while after the Articles of Peace between us and France were concluded, ratified by both Parties, and on the 28th. of November the Peace was proclaimed at London, and at Paris much about the same time.

Whereupon soon after Cromwell not to be behind hand in State, and to provide for the diligent management of all matters concluded in this Treaty, sends over in the Quality of his Embassadour Extraordinary to the French King, Colonel Lockhart, sometime one of the Itinerant Judges in Scotland, and now advanced to this Dignity by the Marriage of a Niece of his pretended Highness. And at the same time there was a strict League of Amity between him and Carolus Gustavus the then King of Sweden, and Embassies of Friendly Correspondence were on each side interchanged; from hence went Mr. Rolt, one of Olivers Bed-Chamber as Envoy, and from thence arrived here the Lord Christian Bond, who was entertained with more than ordinary respect; for of all Amities that were between Cromwell and Foreign Princes and States, his most particular and intimate seems to have been with the Swedish King, whom a while after he under-hand aided with men in his War against the Dane, while at the same time he made shew of endeavouring an Accommodation between those two Kings.

One principal Condition of the Treaty with France, was the exclusion of the King and all his Relations and Adherents out of the King of France his Dominions; but he upon foresight of what this Treaty would come to, had long since betaken himself to Germany, and there remained

(for the most part at Colen, as hath been already mentioned) until such time as the Spaniard invited him into Flanders. His Brother the Duke of Tork, notwithstanding the great Command he had in the King of France his Army (the nearest Ties and Relations little avail, when Self-Interest comes in place) was by the same reason of State advertised to depart that Kingdom with all his Retinue by a prefixed time, not without some Complements and Apologies for this dismission; also his departure was respited for some space, in which he was visited, and honourably treated by the Marshal Turenne, and others of the French Grandees; as likewise the Duke of Modena (who at that time was come into France about some important Affairs;) at length he took his leave of the King and Court of France, and attended by the Lord St. Albans, and other English Lords, took his Journey toward Flanders, where at that time the King his Brother resided, at the invitation of Don John of Austria, who was then Governour of the Low-Countries for the King of Spain, sent the Count of Fuensaldagne, to offer him in the name of the Spanish King all possible Service and Assistance:

The close of this Year puts on Mourning in like manner as the last: the last Year ended with the Learned Selden; this, with that most Pious and Reverend Prelate, James Usher Archbishop of Armagh, and once Primate of Ireland, whose Judicious Writings are sufficiently famous in the Commonwealth of Learning throughout Christendom; his Burial, though he died on the one and twentieth of March, was deferred till the 17th of April, and then performed with all decent Pomp, and by most of the Nobility in London, attended to Westminster-Abby, where his Funeral Oration was delivered by the Almoner to Cromwell (for so Dr. Bernard, once Preacher to the Society of Gray's-Inne, was then entituled.) Moreover Cromwell himself defrayed all things befitting his Interment, bestowing 200 l. toward the solemnizing thereof. Yet were his Coffers not so well furnished as he desired. And therefore notwithstanding his no success in his last Parliament, he finds a necessity of calling one again, whereupon he sends forth Writs in July for the summoning of another Parliament on the seventeenth of September.

A Parliament summoned again.

In the mean while, a part of the English Navy, namely, the Rear-Admiral and six other Ships under Captain Richard Stayner, set upon a Fleet of Eight Spaniards, within four Leagues of the Bay of Cadiz; the Admirals Ship, in which was General Don Marco del Porto, with six hundred thousand Pieces of Eight, run ashore in the Bay; the Vice-Admiral a Gallion Commanded by Don Francisco de Esquevel, and having in her 1200000 Pieces of Eight, and another ship Commanded by Don Rodrigues Calderon were taken, and afterwards fired (one wilfully by the Spaniards in it, the other by accident;) Two others were taken and kept in possession, the Rear-Admiral a Gallion, Commanded by Don Francisco del Hayo, and having in her two Millions of Plate, and another Ship commanded by John de la Torre, very richly laden; another man of War of some value, with a Portugul Prize, and a small

Gen. Blake and Gen. Montagues Victory over the Spanish Fleet near Cadiz.

1656 Vessel of Advice from the Vice-Roy of Mexico, escaped to Gibraltar. In the Vice-Admiral which was set on fire by the Spaniards themselves, to prevent being taken Prisoners, was the Marquess of Baydex with his whole Family. There perished in this Combustion (besides a number of less Note) the Marquess himself, with his Wife and his Eldest Daughter, who was going into Spain to be married to the Duke of Medina Celi. There were saved from this fire, the Marquess his eldest Son Don Francisco de Lopez, a younger Son Don Joseph de Sunega, and two Daughters, Donna Josepha, and Catalina, with about ninety others. In the Rear-Admiral was also taken Prisoner Don Diego de Villa Alva, Governour of the Havana. It was related by the young Marquess Francisco de Lopez, who with his Brother and Sisters was brought up to London, and there for a while detained Prisoners that the Cities of Lima and Calao in Peru, were about five Months before destroyed by an Earthquake and Fire raining from Heaven, in which Ruine there perished above 1000 Spaniards, but of Indians not above 100: also that the Mountains of Potosi being laid level, the Gold and Silver Mines were thereby utterly destroyed. This enterprize near Cadiz purchased no less profit than honour to the performers thereof, and to the Chief in power. As for the Spanish young Nobles that were taken, the Protector, to give him his due, dealt very nobly by them, and after no very long time of detention, dismissed them home without any Ransome.

A sad and wonderful accident at Peru.

The Parliament assemble.

On the seventeenth of September (the time appointed) a Parliament assembled at Westminster, and chose for their Speaker Sir Tho. Widdrington, none were to be admitted in this Convention, by the Instrument of Government, but such as after their Elections should be approved of, and allowed by the Council, and there were many discontented persons chosen, of those that were dismissed at the last Dissolution of what remained of the Long Parliament, and others of the Fifth Monarchy Principle, that the Protector thought it not safe to admit into the House, till some Laws should be passed for the better strengthening of his Authority, so that till the 26th of June the proceeding went on smoothly enough, and on that day the Parliament adjourned it self to the twentieth of January following, and passed some Acts, the principal whereof were:

An Act for Renouncing and Disanulling the Title of Charles Stuart unto the Nations of England, Scotland, and Ireland.

An Act for the securing of his Highness the Lord Protector's Person, and the continuance of the Nation in security and peace.

A Vote to assist his Highness in his War against the Spaniard, which they declare to have been undertaken upon just ground.

An Act for preventing the multiplicity of Buildings within ten Miles of London; the substance of which was, That for every House built from such a time within that compass, upon a New Foundation, there should be paid a years Rent to the Protector.

The Humble Petition and Advice, was a Model of Government, with which they several times waited upon the Protector at White-hall, to defire him to take the Chief Government of the Nations upon him, with the Title of KING; of which, the Power he already had, the Name only he wanted. This Offer was brought to an open Conference, but it was first for a long time together gently and tenderly touch't upon, as springing from a Motion suddenly started by some of the Protector's Friends; whenas sure enough they did but work after the Copy secretly prescribed them, and as they had private encouragement and Instructions from the person they seemed to Court. As oft as the Members made their Addresses to him with this Humble Petition and Advice, he still deferred further time of deliberation, before he could positively determine in a matter of so great weight and concernment; till at length, being requested to give his final Answer, he returned (after he had several times sifted his Officers, to see how they stood affected, and found them so averse (the most part of them) that he thought it not safe to venture) That he could not take upon him the Government with that Title. Thus openly refusing (in regard Matters were not brought to sufficient maturity) what it was generally more than believed, he had mainly pursued.

It must needs be thought high time for Cromwell's Convention to make Acts for the security of his Body, since there was now more noise than ever of a most desperate Plot against it. The Criminals said to be of this Plot, were Miles Sindercomb, a cashier'd and dis-satisfied Army-man, Toop, one of Cromwell's Life-Guard, Cecil and Bois, the last of whom was a Priest belonging to Don Alonso de Cordenas (once Lieger Embassadour here from Spain) and by him instructed, as it was given out, to hire and set those other his Agents a work, comes off himself with a Non est inventus; Cecil and Toop pleaded they were drawn in by Sindercomb; he on the other side, that he was trapan'd by them. Of the several Ambushes in this Plot, thus runs the Story; At Hammer-smith a House is hired on purpose, placing of an Engine called a Blunderbuss, to shoot him as he goes to Hampton-Court; at Hide-Park Corner also he is waited for, as he goes to take the Air; as likewise at another House in Westminster, by which he was to go to the Parliament House. Lastly, when these took no effect, the next design was to set White-hall on Fire, by placing a Basket of combustible matter in the Chappel, with a Train laid to have taken Fire at a prefixed time; which also some way or other happens to be discovered and prevented. In conclusion, he of the Life-Guard discovers all, and both he and Cecil have their pardons, he for his discovery, and Cecil for his free Confession, and the sorrow he expressed. Sindercomb boldly and sturdily standing it out, and denying all at the Court commonly called the Upper-Bench, before Cromwell's Attorney General, was nevertheless cast by the Witness of his two fellow Conspirators who left him in the lurch, and was sentenced to be hanged, drawn, and quartered at Tyburn; in the mean time being kept close prisoner in the Tower. That very morning he was to have been executed, he was found dead in the Chamber, being reported to have snufft up into his Head a certain poysonous Powder to avert the shame and misery of the Execution that was preparing

The trial of James Naylour before the Parliament.

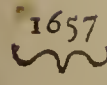

Memorable also was the Tryal (happening a little before this discovery) of one James Naylour, the great Champion and Ring-leader of the Sect called Quakers, who having spread his Doctrine, and gained many Profelytes to it in divers parts of the Nation, was more especially taken notice of at Bristol, and from thence was brought up to London, attended by several men and women of his Opinion, who all the way they came (the Women especially) are said to have sung Hosanna's, and to have used the same kind of expressions toward him, as anciently the people of the Jews did to our Saviour, when he rode triumphant into Jerusalem. The Parliament took it upon them to Judge him themselves, before whom being convented, he was charged of Blasphemy, for assuming to himself Divine Honours, and such Attributes as were due unto Christ only. After he had used many cunning Sophisms and evasions to clear himself, such as argued him not altogether ignorant of humane Letters, he was nevertheless sentenced by the House to be (first at London) publickly whipt, pilloried, and stigmatized as a Blasphemer, then to be conveyed to Bristol, there to be also whipt; lastly, to be brought back to London, to remain in Bridewell during pleasure: which Sentence was punctually inflicted upon him.

The King keeps an Army in Flanders

The King now in Flanders, having his residence for the most part at Bruges, had, upon hopes of the good success of those his Subjects of England, who now began again busily to stir for him in all parts of the Nation, embodied together several Regiments, consisting of such English, Scotch, and Irish as he recalled out of the Service of the French King, and those that came in to him from other parts, whose Colonels were the Duke of Ormond, the Earl of Rochester, the Lords Wentworth and Gerard, and Lieutenant General Middleton; these Forces he kept quartered upon the Seacoast, to have been in readiness, if occasion were, to have seconded those in England; Monsieur Marsin, an expert Souldier, formerly Lieutenant-General to the Prince of Conde, being designed to have conducted this Army; but the Counsels of his Friends that acted for him in England, being from time to time betrayed, and his Majesty not being in a capacity to keep his men in continual pay, he took the opportunity, since he could not make use of them himself, to gratifie a Power that had oblig'd him, and which stood in need of resolute men, and thereupon consigned them to the Service of the King of Spain.

 In vain did Cromwell think to be acknowledged the Protector of the three Nations, since all the several Interests therein, how contrary soever among themselves, attempted at one time or other, to shake off the Yoke of his Protection: yet as much in vain did both, all that already, and those that at present attempted to strive, Oliver being still too cunning and too quick for them all; for on the nineteenth of April, 1657. at a certain house in Shoreditch, were apprehended a discontented party formerly in the Army, that went under the name of Fifth-Monarchy-Men, such as taking upon them to be the Champions of Christ's Monarchy on Earth, renounced all Monarchy beside; the chief of whom were Thomas Venner, a Wine-Cooper-prædicant (whom we shall have occasion to take more notice of hereafter) Ashton, Hopkins, Gowler, and Gray their Scribe. They had appointed to Rendezvous that night at Mile-end-green, and thence to have marched into some other Counties to joyn with others of their Party; that were ready to shew themselves upon the first opportunity; there was taken with them, besides a great quantity of Arms, and certain Printed Papers (that were to be dispersed) a Standard with a Lion couchant, Gules, in a field Argent, and having this Motto, Who shall rouse him? There were also taken into custody Major General Harrison, Captain Lawson late Vice Admiral, Colonel Rich, and Major Danvers; whereof the first was committed to the Serjeant at Arms, and the rest to other Prisons.

Fifth-Monarchy-men apprehended upon a design against the Government.

Major General Harrison and others secured.

The Spaniards were very much distressed in all parts by the War with the Protector, and on the twentieth of April so gallant an Action was performed by General Blake in part of their Dominion, that the like hath scarce been mentioned in Story.

The General lying with some Ships near Cadiz to watch for the return of the Spanish Plate-Fleet, had intelligence that they had put into the Bay of Santa Cruz in the Island of Teneriff, hereupon he weighed Anchor on the 13th. of April, and on the 20th. rode with his ships off the offing at Santa Cruz, where he discerned the Spanish Fleet to the number of sixteen, barricadoed in the Bay in a semicircular manner. Near to the mouth of the Haven a Castle is placed, which was then well fortified with great Ordnance, and besides that, there were seven Forts round about the Bay, with six, four, and three great Guns on each, all united by a Line of communication from Fort to Fort, and well lined with Musquetiers, and Don Diego Diaz the Spanish General of the Fleet, upon sight of Blake's Fleet caused all the smaller ships to be moored close to the shore, and set six great Gallions well-manned further out at anchor, with their broad sides at Sea.

General Blake's successful enterprise against the Spaniard at Santa Cruz.

Blake having well considered this posture of the enemy, sent Captain Stayner Commander of the Speaker Frigate with a Squadron into the Bay, who by eight the next morning fell pell-mell on the Spanish ships, but Blake, who would have his share of the toil and glory of so brave an enterprise, immediately seconded Stayner, and placed some ships to pour their broad-sides into the Castles and Forts, whilst he with Stayner fought the Spanish Fleet (which was not inferior in number to the English, and much better manned) and by two in the afternoon they gained an intire Victory, but the General perceiving he could not bring off the Spis, set them all on fire, but one that was sunk; and when this Service was performed, the

1656 wind even to wonder, which before blew strong into the Bay, suddenly veer'd about to South-West (which brought our Ships safe out to Sea.)

The News of this success of Blake was so grateful to the Protector and the Parliament, that they ordered him a Jewel of five hundred pound, and an hundred pound was given to the Messenger that brought the Letters, and proportionable Gratuities and Thanks to most of the Officers and Mariners.

An Army of English sent to aid the French in Flanders

According to the Conditions of Agreement between England and France, the French King demanded Auxiliary Forces from England to help him in his War against the Spaniard in Flanders, which was readily granted by the Protector, and 6000 Foot forthwith ordered to be sent over, Commanded in Chief by Sir John Reynolds, one of Cromwell's Knights, a man of good Courage and Resolution, once Commissary General in Ireland. No sooner were these Forces arrived in France, but the French by their help took two very advantageous places, Montmedi and St. Venant; nor was it long after ere they took the strong Fort of Mardike, being of notable consequence toward the speedy gaining of Dunkirk. This Fort was immediately after it was taken, consigned by the French into the sole possession of Major General Morgan and the English, who presently fell to fortifying of it, and in a short while made it so impregnable, that when the Spaniard was sensible how much it imported to the keeping of Dunkirk, to regain this Fort, sent a strong power of men (among whom were two thousand Scotch and Irish Reformadoes, assigned by our King to that Service, and commanded by his Brother the Duke of Tork) to set upon its recovery by a desperate Storm; they were, after a very Gallant and Resolute effort upon the place, which continued for the space of six hours, repelled in the end, with the loss of many men.

The Protector's Installation.

After Cromwell had given his final Answer to his Parliament, that he could not take upon him the Government with the Title of King, it was resolved on, that the Title of Lord Protector should be continued and inserted in the Humble Petition and Advice, by which Title he was solemnly invested (with much more Ceremony than before) on the six and twentieth of June, before a great Assembly of people in Westminster-hall, where a Fabrick was erected for that purpose, and a Chair of State placed for the Lord Protector, whose Installation wanted but little of a Regal manner; and though he attained not the Crown, yet he had the Scepter; for there were four Emblems of Government presented unto him by Sir Thomas Widdrington the Speaker (who at the delivery of them made an Oration to him, in which he amply descanted upon each of them) a Purple Velvet Robe lined with Ermines, wherewith he was vested by the Earl of Warwick, Commissioner Whitlock, presented a large Bible with Bosses and Clasps richly Gilt, and a Scepter of Gold, and a Sword, which the Speaker girt about him. Thus attired, while he sat in his Chair under a Canopy of State, holding the Scepter in his hand, the Herald standing aloft, made a signal Trumpet to sound thrice; after which he was proclaimed Lord Protector of the Commonwealth of England, Scotland, and Ireland, and then returned to White-hall in State, 1658 having the Sword carried before him by the Earl of Warwick. He was likewise proclaimed not only in London, and other parts of England, but also in the Chief Cities of Scotland and Ireland. And now he began to take the King upon him in his manner of Living, and to Govern after a more Monarchical manner, and to model his Family according to the fashion of a Kings Court; to which end he had his Yeomen of the Guard in their Livery of Gray Cloth, with Welts of black Velvet, of whom Walter Strickland was Captain; his Lord Chamberlain was Sir Gilbert Pickering, the Lord Keeper of the Seal Nathaniel Fynnes; Lambert was Warden of the Cinque-Ports, Glyn Lord Chief Justice of England, and Steel (formerly Recorder of London) Lord Chief Baron. Moreover, being thus confirmed Protector by Authority of his Parliament, and having fortified himself by Alliances abroad (for besides the Leagues with France, Sweden, the United States; and fair Correspondence with Denmark, he had also upon the coming of Don Francisco de Mello Embassadour, concluded a firm Peace with Portugal) he began to make it his next care, for the better establishing of himself, and strengthening of his Interest at home, to advance his nearest Friends and Relations, and to match his Children into the Noblest Families; his eldest Son Richard he called out of the Country, to inure him to a Court-Life, and an insight into publick Affairs, designing him for Succession in the Protectorate, which the University of Oxford prudently foreseeing (as the Learned were never found backward in complying with the Times, and courting the Rising Sun) sent their Agents and Proctors to him to elect him their Chancellour, in which Honour he was solemnly Installed at White-hall. His second Son Henry, he made Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, in the room of his Son-in-law Fleetwood, whom he recalled from thence, wanting, as he said, his presence and Counsel. His two youngest Daughters he matched, Frances the younger to Mr. Robert Rich, Grand-Child to the then Earl of Warwick, and Mary the elder to the Lord Falconbridge: the Nuptials for them both being kept with much festivity and splendor, both at White-hall and Hampton-Court, and the Ladies are so virtuous they deserved a better Father.

The Protector's eldest Son Installed Chancellour of Oxford. His second Son created Lord Lieut. of Ireland. His youngest Daughter married to Mr. Rob. Rich. His eldest to the L. Falconbridge.

Scarce was the Mirth of these Solemnities over, Sir John Reynolds and his Company cast away upon Goodwin Sands when, to allay the Triumphs for the several successes of the English in Flanders, there arrived the News of the loss of Sir John Reynolds General of the Forces in those Parts, who with Colonel White and some others, imbarquing for England, by the way of Goodwin-Sands, in a small Vessel, at a tempestuous Season, contrary to the persuasions of many [It is unsafe to venture against ill Prefages] was cast away with his whole Company. But here was something more than ordinary in this hasty coming over of Reynolds and White, both seeming to prevent the arrival of each other; for whether Reynolds was sent for by Cromwell, or suspected the intention of White to be some Impeachment against him; his business probably was to defend himself in reference to an imputation of holding correspondence with the Royalty, because he was prevailed with by the Duke of Tork, 1658 York, who always loved stout men, to give him a meeting between Dunkirk and Murdiike, at which Parley, Reynolds was indeed not backward to render his Highness those Honours and Civilities which were due to a person of his Illustrious Quality. Not many Months before, there died at Sea as he was entring into the Sound of Plymouth, that valiant and expert Sea-man General Robert Blake, not long surviving his notable Exploit at Santa Cruz; the best Elogium that can be given of him, is the true rehearsal of his Actions; than which, saving that it was his misfortune to serve an illegal Power, never were any performed at Sea more conducing to the Glory of our English Nation. Also Vice-Admiral Badily ended his Life on Land, whither he was come for the recovery of his Health. And at Jamaica there died Lieutenant General Brain, Commander in Chief of the Forces there.

The death of Gen. Blake, Vice Admiral Badily, and Lieut. General Brain.

Col. Sexby one that was a Prisoner in the Tower upon some design against Cromwell on a Commonwealth account, died about this time, and his death was not without suspicion of Poyson: he was a virulent Enemy to the late King, and all the Royal Line, and suspected to have acted the horrid murder on him by cutting of his Head, or assisting therein with a Vizer; for upon that action he was promoted from a private Trooper to the Command of a Regiment.

The return of Cromwell's Convention after their Adjournment with the addition of the Other House.

The Humble Petition and Advice.

The last Convention having adjourned on the 26th of June, met again on the 20th of January following; and in this Session, which differed from the other, as much as one distinct Parliament could possibly have done from another, two very observable things are to be taken notice of, which gave more disturbance to Cromwell's Ambition and Safety, than he with all his Policy and foresight was aware of. The first was the admission of those Members which in the last Session were kept out with a high hand, whom since the Injustice of the act did not restrain from excluding the time before, the consideration of his Interest urged him now no less, but rather the more to have excluded them this time also; but he was obliged to the contrary by his Friends (if at least they were his Friends) of the last Convention, who made it one of their Articles in their Humble Petition and Advice, That those persons who are legally chosen by a Free Election of the People to serve in Parliament, may not be excluded from doing their Duties, but by consent of that House whereof they are Members. The other was the erecting of a new Convocation, intended in (imitation of the Old Constitution) for a House of Lords, but they would not venture at first to call it by any other name than that of the Other House: It consisted partly of such as he took for his especial Favourites, Officers of the Army and others; many of which were pickt out of the House of Commons to be constellated in the Other House, partly of several of the late excluded Commonwealth-men, and such likewise of the Army whom he thought hereby to draw off to his own Party, and about half a score of the old Nobility were nominated, but refused to come. Now in this Contrivance of his, whatever his expectation of it was, he found himself very much deceived, since by this strong inundation of the late excluded, and the translation of several of his Friends of the Commons into his Other House, his Interest there was so weakened, that his translating also of a few of his Opponents (if he thought to make a counterpoise that way) availed him little; for Sir Arthur Hazlerig, and the rest of the Sticklers, both disdaining to accept of Cromwell's offered Baronage, and that by the addition of their own presence they might strengthen their own Party the more, took their places in the House of Commons, by which means the Commonwealth-faction grew so potent, and flew so high, that the Other House was not so much as taken notice of, except in way of derision and contempt; so far were they from being concurred with, or owned in any of their Messages. Moreover, they began to call in question what was done in the last Session, as being invalid without their assent: So that the Humble Petition and Advice, which but lately made such a noise, was like in a moment to come to nothing. This so incensed the Protector, that in a great heat and passion he goes from his Council, and notwithstanding the earnest dissuasion of some of the chief of them, takes a Hackney-Coach for haste, and being come into his Other (or Lords) House, sends for the House of Commons up to him, and for a Preamble to their Dissolution, standing under a Canopy of State, unfolds his mind to them in this following Speech, which we have thought remarkable enough to set down at large, in regard it plainly discovers (as averse as he seemed from accepting the Kingly Title) his strange perturbation of spirit, and how nettled to the quick he was to see himself crost and curbed in the tendency and progress he made thereunto, though by ways a little fetcht about, and under the shew of settlement and flourishing Estate of the Nation.

The Commons disown the Other House, and begin to question the Government.

Cromwell dissolves them.

Oliver's Speech at the Dissolution of his last Parliament.

I had very comfortable expectations that God would make the Meeting of the Parliament a Blessing; and the Lord be my Witness, I desire the carrying on the Affairs of the Nation to these Ends. The Blessing which I mean, and which we ever climbed at, was Mercy, Truth, Righteousness, and Peace, which I desire may be improved.

That which brought me into the Capacity I now stand in, was the Petition and Advice given me by you, who in reference to the Ancient Constitution, did draw me to accept of the Place of Protector; There is not a man living can say I sought it, no not a Man nor Woman treading upon English Ground; but I contemplating the sad Condition of these Nations, relieved from an Intestine War unto a six or seven years Peace, I did think the Nations happy therein. But to be Petitioned thereunto, and advised by you to undertake such a Government, a Burden too heavy for any Creature, and this to be done by the House, that then had the Legislative Capacity, I did look that the same Men that made the Frame, should make it good unto me: I can say in the presence of God, in comparison of whom we are but like poor creeping Ants upon the Earth, I would have been glad to have lived under my Wood-side, to have kept a flock of Sheep, rather than undertook such a Place of Government as this is; but undertaking it by the Advice and Petition of You, I did look that you that had offered it unto me, should make it good.

I did tell you at a Conference concerning it, That I would not undertake it, unless there might be some other persons that might interpose between me and the House of Commons, who then had the Power to prevent tumultuary and popular Spirits; and it was granted I should name any other House; and I named it of men that shall meet you wheresoever you go, and shake hands with you, and tell you it is not Titles, nor Lords, nor Party that they value, but a Christian and an English Interest, men of your own Rank and Quality, who will not only be a Ballance unto you, but to themselves, while you love England and Religion.

Having proceeded upon these Terms, and finding such a Spirit as is too much predominant, every thing being too high or too low, when Vertue, Honesty, Piety, and Justice are omitted: I thought I had been doing that which was my Duty, and thought it would have satisfied you; but if every thing must be too high or too low, you are not to be satisfied. Again, I would not have accepted of the Government, unless I knew there would be a just Accord between the Governour and the Governed, unless they would take an Oath to make good what the Parliaments Petition and Advice advised me unto; upon that I took one Oath, and they took another Oath upon their part answerable to mine; and did not every one know upon what Condition they swore? God knows, I took it upon Condition expressed in the Government: and I did think we had been upon a Foundation, and upon a Bottom, and thereupon I thought myself bound to take it, and to be advised by the Two Houses of Parliament. We standing unsettled till we were arrived at that; the Consequences would necessarily have been Confusion, if that had not been settled. Yet there are not constituted Hereditary Lords, nor Hereditary Kings; the Power consisting in the Two Houses and my Self: I do not say, that the meaning of your Oath was to you, that were to go against my own Principles, to enter upon another mans Conscience; God will judge between Me and You: If there had been in you any intention of Settlement, you would have settled upon this Basis, and have offered your Judgement and Opinion.

God is my Witness, I speak it, it is evident to all the World, and people living, that a new business hath been seeking in the Army against this Actual Settlement by your Consent; I do not speak to these Gentlemen or Lords (pointing to his right hand) whatsoever you will call them, I speak not this to them, but to you; you advised me to run into this Place, to be in a Capacity by your Advice; yet instead of owning a thing taken for granted, some must have I know not what; and you have not only disjoyned your selves, but the whole Nation, which is in likelihood of running into more Confusion in this fifteen or sixteen days that you have sate, than it hath been from the rising of the last Session to this day, through the Intention of devising a Commonwealth again, that some of the People might be the Men that might rule all, and they are endeavouring to engage the Army to carry that thing; and hath that man been true to this Nation, whosoever he be, especially that hath taken an Oath, thus to prevaricate. These designs have been upon the Army, to break and divide us: I speak this in the presence of some of the Army, that these things have not been according to God, nor according to Truth (pretend what you will.) These things tend to nothing else but the playing of the King of Scots his Game, if I may so call him; and I think my self bound before God to do what I mean to prevent it. That which I told you in the Banqueting-House was true, That there were preparations of Force to invade us; God is my Witness, it hath been confirmed to me since within a day, that the King of Scots hath an Army at the Water-side ready to be shipped for England; I have it from those who have been Eye-witnesses of it; and while it is doing, there are endeavours from some who are not far from this place, to stir up the people of this Town into a Tumulting, what if I said into a Rebellion; and I hope I shall make it appear to be no better, if God assist me; it hath been not only your endeavour to pervert the Army while you have been sitting, and to draw them to state the Question about a Commonwealth, but some of you have been lifting of persons by Commission from Charles Stuart, to joyn with any Insurrection that may be made: And what is like to come upon this (the Enemy being ready to invade us) but even present Blood and Confusion. And if this be so, as I do assign to this Cause, your not assenting to what you did invite me to by the Petition and Advice, as that which might be the settlement of the Nation, and if this be the end of your sitting, and these be your Carriages, I think it high time that an end be put unto your sitting, And I do declare to you, I do dissolve this Parliament: And let God judge between me and You. At which many of the Commons cried Amen. And so the Parliament were Dissolved.

Thus was he driven from one Inconvenience to another, from the Inconvenience of a Parliament that cost him, to the Inconvenience of no Parliament at all, whereby he was much freightened for want of those supplies of Money which he expected.

Toward the latter end of this year died the Protectors Son-in-law Mr. Robert Rich, and was but little above two Months survived by his Grandfather the Earl of Warwick, himself.

The following year, 1658. begins with the News of a Victory at Jamaica (which came by an Express from the Governour on the 8th of April) obtained by a Party of the English there, commanded by Major Richard Stevens, against 500 Spaniards, who under Don Christopher Arnoldo Saffer, having lately landed in that Island, and begun to fortifie themselves at a place called St. Anne, were fiercely set upon by the English, and forced to flie into the Woods and Mountains; and another Body of Spaniards, consisting of 300, who had fortified themselves at Chare-ras, in the North of the Island, were by the Governour himself Colonel Doiley driven quite out of their Hold, Don Francisco de Prencia, the Maestre del Campo, with others taken, many kill'd, and the rest utterly dispers'd.

Cromwel had no sooner freed himself of the danger threatned him from his Parliament, but he is presently alarm'd again by his old enemy the Royalist, whom yet he had still the Fortune to prevent by his Intelligence; however, he took all Advantages to provide still more and more for his

Among those that had been formerly imprisoned, were Doctor Hewet, Minister of St. Gregories, and Sir Henry Slingsbey; which last had been a Prisoner ever since the Rising in the West; yet being a person who was known to bear no good will to the present Power, he is charged with an Intention of delivering up Hull, meerly upon the expressing of his Consent thereunto, to some that were sent to make the motion to him, and list out his mind with purpose to betray him; and these were Major Waterhouse, Captain Overton, and Lieutenant Thomson; and the Doctor seems to have been no less hardly dealt with, considering what things were laid to his Charge; which had they been true, would certainly never have been so utterly denied at the very moment of his Death, by a man of his known Honesty and Integrity. The rest that were taken afterwards were, Mr. John Mordant, Brother to the Earle of Peterborough, Mr. Manley a Merchant, Mr. Hartgil Baron, Mr. Stapeley, Mr. Maunsel, Mr. Woodcock, Mr. Carrent, Mr. Jackson and Captain Mallory, of whom Mr. Mordant, Woodcock, Carrent, and divers others were tried at a High Court of Justice, which on the twenty fifth of May was set up under the Presidentship of Commissioner Lisle. All hitherto mentioned, except Sir Henry Slingsbey and Doctor Hewet, having the good hap to come off with life: Sir Henry and the Doctor were the first brought to Tryal, and both of them sentenced to die as Traytors: The first, upon the bare Testimony of those three men which had so treacherously circumvented him, which in vain he pleaded; as also the impossibility, a Prisoner as he was, of performing what he was charged with. The other as a Mute, disowning the Courts Authority, and thereupon denying to plead. The next was Mr. Mordant, who also at first disavowed the Courts Authority, but was at length prevailed with to plead, and in the end acquitted only by one voice. In that fortunate interim, while Colonel Pride by reason of a Fit of the Stone wherewith he was troubled, had withdrawn himself from the Court, and staid somewhat longer than he intended; the other two being so far favoured, as to have their Sentence mitigated, were on the eighth of June beheaded on Tower-Hill. The next that were tryed were Mr. Thomas Woodcock, Captain Henry Mallory and Sir Humphrey Bennet: The first made so handsome and discreet a defence for himself, that they could fasten no Accusation upon him, and so were forced to acquit him. Captain Henry Mallory (tho' scandaliz'd by some malicious persons) behav'd himself with Resolution and Loyalty, and was condemn'd, but not put to Death. Of the rest that had to do with this High Court, William Carrent was acquitted: Colonel Edward Ashton and John Battely, the first in Tower-Street, the other in Cheapside, were hanged and quartered on the seventh of July; the same day Henry Fryer, ready to have been executed in Smithfield, and two days after John Summer in Bishopsgate-street, and Oliver Allen in Grace-Church-street, had their Reprieves brought them. The same day the two last were Reprieved, Edmund Stacy, his Sentence remitted, was hanged near the Royal Exchange. In the mean time, Manley, Baron, and Maunsel aforementioned, with two others, namely, Edmund Seymour, and Guy Carlton, having made their escape, were at the Upper-Bench (as it was then called) Indicted of High Treason, though absent, and outlawed.

In Flanders Successes came on with a swift Career: presently after the taking of Mardike-Fort, Dunkirk was straightly begirt by the joyned Forces of the French and English, the French commanded by the Marshall of Turenne, the English by the Lord Lockhart, Ambassadour from the Protector to the French King, who was constituted General in the room of Sir John Reynolds deceased. The Relief of this so important a place (it being the chief Sea Port, and, as it were, the Key of all Flanders) the Spaniards resolved to Assay, though with the hazard of a pitch'd Field; and to that purpose they assembled together all the Force they could make, amounting to about seven thousand Foot, and nine thousand Horse, Commanded by Don John himselfe in person, together with the Duke of York, the Prince of Conde, and the Marquess of Caracene; and drawn down from Furres Fort, were engaged by the Marshall of Turenne, and the Count of Schomberg joyning with Lockhart and his English Forces, who making their way (a good part of them) up a Sand-Hill against the whole Power of the Spaniards, were the main Instruments in gaining a clear and eminent Victory over the Spanish Army, most of the Infantry being either slain or taken; and among the taken were divers Officers of the Spanish Nobility, and Persons of high Quality, seventeen Colours, six great Guns, with the whole Baggage of the Field; the Prince of Conde was unhorsed in the Fight, and Mounted again by his Cousin Bouteville, who was thereby taken Prisoner in the Princes stead. There were slain of the English Captain Sherwin, and another Captain, Five Lieutenants and two Ensigns, with eighty Common Souldiers, besides three hundred wounded, and some mortally, among whom, Lieutenant Colonel Roger Fenwick, who who was reported a stout man, and his loss much bewailed: A day or two before this Battel, the Marshal of Hocquincourt (who had caused the important Town of Hesdin to revolt from the French to the Spaniard) was slain as he went out Picquering upon a Party. No sooner was this Battel ended, but the French and English returned again afresh to the Siege of Dunkirk, which the Marquis of Leda Governour thereof (who had been formerly sent Embassador to the Protector) seeing now more straightly than ever environ'd both by Land and Sea, whereby it was reduced to great extremities; he resolute to defend the Town, made a bold sally forth, in which he received his mortal Wound: the Governours death, and the terror of the Granadoes shot into the Town, wrought so upon the besieged, that they were speedily brought to Articles of Surrender, and on the 25th of June, march'd out with Colours flying, so that the King of France in Person, accompanied with the Cardinal Mazarine, took possession of the place, and immediately resigned it up into the hands of General Lockhart in behalf of the Lord Protector, and the English.

The sixth of August, Elizabeth the Protector's second Daughter died at Hampton-Court of an Imposthume in some of the inward parts, which afflicted him very much, because he loved her above all his Children; and that sorrow was increased by the length of her Sickness, and the grievous torments she endured: A little before she expired (which was in much pain) the Delirium of her Sickness prompted her to utter many things, (which though formerly she thought she yet durst not express) against the Injustice of many of her Fathers Actions. She was married to one Cleypole, the Son of a private Gentleman of Lincolnshire, of a moderate Fortune; but she could not be confin'd to it being of a Spirit as high as if she had been born to that Greatness to which her Fathers Ambition had advanced her. She was of a very generous and obliging Disposition, and very much troubled at her Fathers Austerity, and oppression of the Royal Party, to several of whom she did many good Offices. The Grief which the Protector had contracted for her death, was very much augmented by his trouble, to discern, that the discontents sprung up amongst many of the Inferiour Officers of the Army, were fomented by Fleetwood and Desborow; the first of whom married his Daughter, and the other his Sister, who with Berry and Cooper Colonels, and Sydenham and Pickering, two of the Privy-Counsellors were in a Confederacy against the present Government in favour of a Commonwealth. And a while after he fell sick himself of a Tertian Fever, which at first seem'd not to signify much danger, but by degrees it grew upon him: yet his Imagination was so far transported with enthusiastick ravings, that insensible of his own danger, he affirmed, That GOD had reserved him to greater Attempts, than ever yet had been performed by him; and that he was assured he should not die of this Sickness. In which Extasie he was much heightened by Goodwin one of his Chaplains, who openly declared, GOD had heard the Prayers of his Servants for him, and given him his Life; 1658. and therefore he perswaded some of his Friends to keep a kind of private Thanksgiving beforehand for his undoubted recovery. This Confidence amused his Physicians so much, that they were less regardful of his Condition. But nevertheless, it was advised he should be brought to White-Hall, where with more conveniency than at Hampton-Court, a respect might be had to his Health, and the publick Affairs of the Nation; where he had not been many days, ere it visibly appeared he had but a few more to live. He had sometime before his Sickness appointed a Junta, or Committee of Nine, with whom he privately consulted in the most urgent Affairs of the Government. These were Fleetwood, Fiennes, Desborow, Whaley, Thurlow, Lawrence, Berry, Cooper and Goff, which were mixed of both Factions; that is, of that of a Single Person, and that of a Commonwealth, that he might displease neither, and that he might by that Confidence divert the latter from Delights upon his Power.

Upon Tuesday the 31th of August, finding himself in danger, he commanded his Servants and all other Persons, except Mr. Thurlow, and Dr. Thomas Goodwin, out of the Room, and declared to them, That in regard he found his Sickness and Weakness encreasing, he was resolved to declare his Successor, according to the Power given him by the * late Petition and Advice; And therefore he desired them to take notice, that he Named and Declared his Son to succeed him accordingly. * A Sy- They asked him which Son: He Replied, My Son Richard, My Eldest Son. Immediately thereupon, there came some Persons into the Room, whereby it hapned, that nothing further was said at that present. But * Mr. Thurlow and Dr. Goodwin immediately conferring together, did conceive that the business was too great and weighty for them alone to bear the Burthen of the Attestation of it; and therefore resolved to take the first opportunity they could to move him again therein, and to desire him for that Reason, to call some others, to whom he might communicate his mind in that matter: But in regard that Relations and others (who perhaps would take it ill to be put out of the Room) were constantly there, they could not all that day, nor the next gain any opportunity.

But on Thursday, perceiving his Distemper very much to encrease, and hourly gain upon him, They resolved not to defer it longer: and thereupon they asked him, Whether he remembered what he had said unto them the Tuesday before? Which he said he did. They asked him, Whether he continued in the same mind or not, touching the Succession of his Son Richard? He answered, That he did. They then told him, it would be requisite he should communicate his pleasure to some others, and that the Declaration of the Business was of too great Concernment and Consequence for them alone to undertake, if there should be Opposition; and therefore desired him to send forthwith for some others. He asked them for whom he should send? They replied, whom he pleased. Then send, said he, for the Committee,

Upon Friday (the third of September, the same memorable day of the Year, that in 1650 he overcame the Scots at Dunbar, and the year following at Worcester) at three of the Clock in the afternoon he departed this Life.

Thus after so many hazards in the Field, so many Ambushes laid to have been laid against him at home, notwithstanding the multitude of Enemies, that from all Parties and Interests whom his violent pursuit of Greatness had exasperated, conspired against his safety; contrary to the real belief of many men, the ill-bodings of some, and the earnest wishes of others, he died not of a violent, but in his Bed a natural Death. The day of his death was ushered in by a Night as tempestuous as had been seen in this Age, as if the Elements had been in Combustion at the flight of a Spirit, which had made so great a Concussion in the Affairs of the World.

Cromwell's Descent and Character. He was born in the Town of Huntington, and was the Son of a Second Brother of Sir Oliver Cromwell of Huntingtonshire, a Person of eminent Note in the late Kings time; his Mother was the Daughter of Sir Richard Steward of the Isle of Ely, and his Wife Elizabeth the Daughter of Sir James Bouchier, by whom he had three Sons (whereof one died young) and four Daughters.

His Family is said to have originally derived the name of Cromwell from that great Cromwell, who was Henry the Eighth's Vicar-General over the Spiritualities; their Lineal Descent was from one Williams of Glamorganshire, who living contemporary with this Lord Cromwell, and marrying his Daughter, in gratitude for the Favours he had done him, took his Name upon him, and transferred it to his own Posterity. As for his Qualities, there is no doubt, though his Dissimulation, his Ambition, and his many other Vices obscured what was praise-worthy in him; yet there was something of Generosity in his Nature, as may be exemplified, in the particular care and regard he had for the Relations of some that had served him faithfully, and died in his Service; which one that writ his Life, parallels with the Gratitude of the fore-mentioned Lord Thomas Cromwell, toward Seignior Friscobald an Italian Merchant, from whom he had received Civilities.

By his Reputation in Arms, he was courted or feared by most of the Princes in Europe, and the King of France and Sweden were entred into so strict a League with him, as might have troubled the whole World; but Cardinal Mazarine, the Chief Minister of France, held most secret Intelligence and Friendship with him. He was a man of singular Courage and Resolution, and that attended with a most prosperous stream of Fortune, which is not always the concomitant of Valour. He kept the Armies under him in so exact Discipline, that they rather seemed a Body of well governed Citizens than Souldiers: Swearing, Profaneness, Drunkenness, Murder, Rapine, Uncleaness, the common Vices of other Souldiers, were not to be found amongst his. His Ambition and desire of Glory, excited him to make Attempts also in other Countreys, in pursuance thereof, whereby a great Renown accrued to our Nation in all parts of the World. And had he not employed that Policy and Sagacity of Parts, which must be confessed to have been in him, to evil Ends, and by unheard-of Impieties traiterously aspired unto that highest pitch of Honour which belonged not to him, usurping his Majesties Government, he might have been worthy of eminent Place and Dignity in it.

An hour after his death, there met together those of the Privy Council then in Town, that had been the most zealous Promoters of the Petition and Advice, and best affected to that Government. These were made acquainted by Thurloe, with what passed on Tuesday and Thursday; and also, that Oliver had subscribed a Paper long before his Death, touching the Succession, wherein Fleetwood was declared Successor; and that this Paper having been laid in a Cabinet, known only to Oliver and his Wife, and no person more (as was thought) was searched for, but could not be found.

They then agreed to send two of their Number to Fleetwood and Desborow, and to know of Oliver's Will concerning his Successor imparted to the Council and Chief Officers. them unfeignedly, whether they acquiesced in the Declaration that Oliver had made, touching the Succession of his Son: acquainting them, that they knew there had been a Paper subscribed by Oliver in his life-time, to the effect aforesaid: and therefore requested to know of them, whether if hereafter any such Paper should be found or produced, they would notwithstanding submit to the last Will and Parol Declaration of Oliver? Whereto Fleetwood replied, and promised, as in the presence of God, That if any such Paper then were, or should thenceforth be found or produced, yet he would not insist thereupon, forasmuch as he cordially acquiesced, as he said, in the succession of Richard. And thereupon a Council was forthwith summoned, where Fiennes and Thurloe gave an Account of Oliver's Appointment of his Successor: and Goodwin, Whaley and Goffe were called in, and attested the same upon their Oaths. And being withdrawn, the Council unanimously declared their Satisfaction: Desborow having first stood up, and adjured them all in the name of the Living God, that if any dissatisfaction remained upon their Spirits, they would freely declare it; as he professed he would have done, had any doubt remained with him. This passed; the President and whole Council 1659 went at once to congratulate Richard, and condole his Fathers Death.

Richard Cromwell proclaimed Protector by the City and chief Officers of the Army.

After the Congratulation, Strickland, Skippon, and some others of the Council were sent to the City, who appeared very well satisfied with what was done; and the next Morning a Proclamation was divulged, subscribed by Chiverton Lord Mayor of London, and as many of the Chief Officers of the Army, and Councillours of State as could be got together; wherein Richard Cromwell was at White-Hall, Charing-Cross, and several other publick places in London, proclaimed Protector of the Commonwealth of England, Scotland, and Ireland. About four a Clock in the Afternoon, after the Proclamation, the Lord Mayor presented his Sword to him, which he presently returned; and after some Ceremonies passed (the Council, and many Officers of State, and of the Army being present) Nathaniel Fiennes, one of the Commissioners of the Great Seal of England administered an Oath to him in these words:

The Oath administered to him by Fiennes.

Do in the presence, and by the Name of God Almighty, promise and swear, That to the uttermost of my Power, I will uphold and maintain the true Reformed Protestant Christian Religion in the purity thereof, as it is contained in the Holy Scripture of the Old and New Testament, to the uttermost of my Power and Understanding, and encourage the Profession and Professors of the same. And that to the utmost of my Power, I will endeavour, as Chief Magistrate of these Nations, the maintenance and preservation of the Peace and Safety of the just Rights and Priviledges of the People thereof. And that in all things, according to my best Knowledge and Power, I will Govern the People of these Nations according to Law.

Mr. Thomas Clarges made choice of to be sent into Scotland to acquaint G. Monk with Richard's Advancement.

Thus far matters succeeded well: his Brother Henry Cromwell was Chief Governour of Ireland, and a Gentleman was sent to acquaint him with the present posture of Affairs. Of Scotland they had some doubt; but to endeavour to rectifie all things there, Richard sent that Evening to Mr. Thomas Clarges (Brother-in-law to General Monk) to prevail with him, to go immediately into Scotland, with his Letters to Monk, to know how he stood affected to his Advancement. This Clarges was pitched upon as one who had great Interest in the General, and had been lately chosen by his procurement, upon the death of one Rome, to be Agent for the Armies and Council of Scotland and Ireland, an Imployment of good Value, whereby he became interested in the knowledge and Affections of the Officers of all the Armies in England, Scotland, and Ireland; for the Regiments of that of Scotland, especially of the Horse, were often changed, whereas the Irish Army continued still unchanged. And although at first his having been in the late Kings Service at Oxford, made them at White-Hall unwilling to employ him; yet he was esteemed of a moderate Behaviour, and had so demeaned himself in the pretended Parliament in the Year 1656. by his actings against the Kingship of Cromwell, that they would not then disoblige him, lest it should seem to be for that Reason. Besides, all of the contrary faction (of which were the chief of the Army) professed a great esteem of him, not so much in respect of himself, but because it was believed Monk engaged him in those Councils; and the opinion of that contributed more than any thing to divert Oliver from accepting the Crown. Clarges willingly accepted of this occasion to go to General Monk, to be able to inform himself particularly of his inclinations: For, although he had a Relation to him by Marriage, the Generals so far distant Residence, gave him little opportunity of other converse with him than by Letters. The City of London, and the generality of the people in England (having been wearied and tired with the miseries of War, and their Spirits subdued by the Oppressions and Tyranny of Oliver Cromwell) seemed outwardly to comply with the necessity of the Time, and submit to an approbation of that they could not remedy. But subtle Contrivances, congratulatory Addresses in all, or most Cities and Counties were framed, subscribed, and presented to him. In Scotland, by private advice to some of the Officers of the Army, things were so prepared, that when Mr. Clarges came thither, he found them all prepossessed, and doubting one the other; they liked, or seemed not to dislike all that was done at London. But the General himself and he had many secret Conferences, and the General then declared himself weary of the uncertain Condition, wherein he found both himself and the Nation intrall'd by the over-ruling Tyranny of the Souldiers (who made themselves a divided Interest from the rest of the people) so that they consulted of a Paper to be drawn up, and to be presented to the new Protector, the Heads whereof were to advise him to suppress the division in the Church, by countenancing a sober and Orthodox Ministry; To permit no Councils of Officers; And to model and put the Army into the hands of the * qualified Nobility and Gentry of the Nations, as such whom the people might best trust. From this Conference which was managed by both, with much reservedness, Clarges began to perceive the General was in his Principles well fixed to restore his Countrey to its ancient Government, when ever a fit occasion should present it self for the Attempt. With this Paper, and a Letter of approbation of the choice of the Protector, Clarges returned to London to him. The Letter he delivered publicly, but the Paper was privately communicated, and well liked of by him: and the prosecution of the Advice thereof in his Attempts to model the Armies, was the main cause of all the Divisions which hapned in them, and the happy Consequences thereof.

By the same Arts, as those from the Cities and Counties in England, Addresses were promoted, and subscribed by all the Regiments in England, Scotland, and Ireland, and the Dominions and Territories thereunto belonging. Lockhart Governour of Dunkirk, who had married his Cousin-Germane, was as forward as any to promote Addresses, both from that Garrison and the rest of the English under Major General Morgan, who were yet in the French Army, Commanded by Marshal Turenne, and had gained a great fame and reputation to their Country, by many signal Services in that Campaign; for by their valour chiefly chiefly, a great Victory had been obtained, as before mentioned, over the Spanish Army near Dunkirk, which was followed by the taking of that Town, and the Fort of Mardike, and the Towns and Forts of Bergen, Dixmude, Ferne, Oudenard, Mervin, Gravelin and Ypre; which last place, taken about the beginning of October, Old Style, was the first Military Success that the English had abroad under Richard's Government. Marshal Turenne had not hopes so late in the year, to gain a place so considerable; but having beaten a party of five thousand men under the Prince of Ligne that was sent to join with some other forces, and to visit that Garrison in their march, he supposed that the Town missing the succor they expected, might quickly be surrendered; they were in it about 2500 old Souldiers, besides whom, all the Townsmen assisted that were able to bear Arms, being in all about 4000; and it was taken in a fortnight Siege. After the Army had been two or three days before it, Turenne sent for Major General Morgan, who commanded the English, to order him to keep double Guards, for that he had certain Intelligence that the Prince of Conde intended with all the force he could get together, to put relief into the place. Morgan informed him, his Men were so exposed, that he commonly lost five or six every time they mounted the Guards, and therefore he proposed, that rather than weary them out with so much continual duty, the Town might be assaulted. Turenne who was a wary Captain, was unwilling to hazard the reputation of that Army which had been victorious by many prosperous successes that Summer, and therefore at first rejected the Advice; but Morgan pressing more upon him, and offering himself with 600 English to go on upon the strongest part of the Town, he at last consented. He was seconded by two Serjeant Majors, who each of them commanded 600 French, and were to attack two other places, at the same time that Morgan made his assault; but he with his English entered and gained most of the out-works, and turned the Cannon of the beleagued upon the Town, before his French Succours came in; and immediately after, the Town was surrendered upon easie Terms; the Prince of Ligne, Barbancon and Aremberg marched out with the Garrison. Turenne embraced Morgan after this service; and, though he had long before esteemed him a very expert and valiant Captain, he ever after valued him as one of the bravest Commanders of his time, and in the Report of this Action to the Most Christian King, he attributed the merit of it wholly to him; which occasioned an Invitation of Morgan to Paris, where it was intimated to him, a good present of Plate was providing to gratifie his services; but he whose modesty made him ever prefer the vertue of generous Actions, before the Reward of them, chose rather to return into England, to his Family and Relations, after his long and hazardous absence.

The Young Protector not so great a wel-wisher to his Majesties cause as was believed.

Some were willing to believe the new Protector had a good affection towards His Majesty, and would use his power to his advantage, as soon as he should be confirmed in it, and had the Army in his absolute obedience, to which they were induced by the observation of his former deportment; for in his private Conditions he demeaned himself with civility and respect to the Gentlemen of the Countrey where he lived, and was always ready to do Offices of kindness to persons in distress, apparently disliking of the severity of his Father, and not averse to overtures for his Majesties Restitution; but it was afterwards evident, that he did but formalize in the doubtful time of his Authority; for when he saw himself owned and acknowledged by the Army and People, he was very much reserved to all that wished well to his Majesty, and either really declined his Service, or had not vertue enough to resist the temptation of greatness, or courage enough toward the declension of his power, to use that little which remained, to attempt to free his Country from thralldom and oppression.

In the first place, after his advancement to the Supreme Dignity, principal care was taken by him and his Council for the Interment of his Father, with all the State and Solemnity accustomed at Kings and Princes Funerals; and therefore search is said to have been made into the Records, to see what had been expended upon the Burial of King James, and the same Cost, if not greater, was to be bestowed on this: The Corps of his late Highness being embalmed and wrapt in Lead, was removed from White-Hall to Somerset-House, there to lie in Regal Pomp and State; a Spectacle to all comers; the order and manner whereof was briefly thus:

Four Rooms one within another were completely hung with black; the three first with Cloth, the fourth with Velvet; each Room was adorned with Escutcheons of his Arms, Crowned with the Imperial Crown, and at the upper-end of each Room, was placed a Chair of State, and over that, a Cloth of State, and over the Cloth, a large Majesty Escutcheon, painted and guilt upon Taffata: In the fourth Room where the Corps were, there lay upon a Bed of State, raised by two gradual Ascents, and covered with a large Pall of black Velvet, his Effigies vested with a rich Sute, Kirtle, and a large Robe of Purple Velvet, Laced with Gold, and Furred with Ermines; to the Kirtle was girt an embroyder'd Belt, by which hung a Sword richly hatcht with Gold, in the right hand was a golden Scepter, in the left a Globe, on the head a purple velvet Cap furr'd with Ermines; behind was placed a Crown Imperial, set with precious Stones, upon a Chair and Cushion of tishued Gold, on each side a rich Sute of Compleat Armour, at his Feet his Crest; the Bed of State was enclosed with Rails and Ballasters covered with Velvet, at each corner whereof, were Pillars adorn'd with Trophies of Military Honors carved and guilt; on the tops of the Pillars were the Supporters of the Imperial Arms, bearing Streamers Crowned; at the Pedestals were Shields and Crowns guilt: within the Rayls stood eight silver Candlesticks or Standards five foot high, with long Tapers of Virgin Wax burning in them, and next them four great Standards of his Arms, set upright in sockets, with the Guidons great Banners, and Banrols of Taffata richly painted and guilt. The Effigies having for some time been seen in this posture, was afterwards shewed in another room, vested after the same manner, and attended with the same Ornaments as is already described, and this continued until the day of conducting the funeral pomp to the Church, which was on the twenty third of November; for till then all things could not be prepared and made ready: and then the Effigies, placed in a stately Funeral Charriot, covered with black Velvet, and drawn with six Horses in like manner mantled, and adorned with black Plumes of Feathers, was attended from Somerset-House to Westminster by all the Officers of his Household, the chief Officers of the Army and Navy, the Magistracy of the City, the Judges at Law, the Ambassadors and Publick Ministers of Foreign States and Princes, the Members of the late Upper-House, and of the Privie Council, all in Mourning, each Company being distinguished by Drums, Trumpets, a Banner born by one of the Chief Ones, and a Horse of State mantled with black Velvet, led also by some one of Eminency. Lastly, the Horse of Honour trapped with Embroidery upon Crimson Velvet, and adorned with white, red, and yellow Plumes, was led by the Master of the Horse, with such other like Formalities used at the Obsequies of great Persons. At the West end of the Abby-Church, the Effigies being taken out of the Charriot, was carried through the Church unto a Canopy of State, born by six of his Gentlemen, up to the East end, where it was placed in a sumptuous Catapalco, or Monument of Wood framed for the purpose, with Pilasters and other Adornments of Architecture, carved, painted and gilt, to remain for a certain time exhibited to publick view; a sort of temporary Monument much used in Foreign parts, at the death of great Princes: the Corps had been privately inhumed many days before the Solemnity in Henry the Seventh's Chappel.

The Solemnity of his Funeral.

The war-like proceeding between the King of Sweden and Denmark.

As soon as the Ceremonious Rites of this great Burial were past, the Preparations for which had for a time very much put a stop to proceedings both Domestick and Foreign, immediately other matters of publick concernment began seriously to be taken into consideration, by the New Protector and his Council. The first thing was the sending of a Naval Supply to the King of Sweden, between whom and the old Protector there had been contracted a very firm and inviolable Amity, and Forces had been sent to this Kings Aid out of this Nation, both for Land and Sea-service; for the latter whereof, he now more than ever had occasion to make up a good stout Fleet; for after that by his Success against the King of Denmark, he had won him to a Concession of a great part of his Territories, and of half the Dominion of the Sound, and had at length withdrawn his Army: the King of Denmark judging the Conditions too hard on his side, and alledging them not to have been punctually observed by the Swede, began presently after the departure of the Swedish Army, to flye to Arms, for the recovery of what was lost, being especially encouraged thereunto by a certain assurance of Aid from the Hollander, besides his entring into confederacy with the Emperour, the King of Poland, and the Marquess of Brandenburgh, against the Swedish King, who having quick Intelligence of the King of Denmark's Design, speeded back with his Forces, and was set down before Copenhagen, ere the Danes were well aware of his coming; but the Danish King had before-hand (providing against the worst that might happen) so well fortified and stored the City, that it was able to endure a long Siege; and now the Sovereignty of this famous Bay of the Baltick Sea, called the Sound, being thus disputed between these two Kings, the Dutch thought it a matter of no small advantage to them, that the Sound should continue in the power of the Dane their constant Ally, lest the Swede gaining too much sway therein, they might be deprived of the benefit thereof, which was of high Concernment to them, and therefore made all possible haste to set out a Fleet for the Relief and Supply of Copenhagen: the English on the other side, thought it no less important to help the Swede, though it were against the Dane and the Dutch, both of them our friends in outward appearance; lest their joynt Interest and prevalence against the Swede, who of all other Potentates was the most firmly united in League to this State, might have proved prejudicial to us likewise in relation to the Sound, which also concerned us no less weightily than the Dutch; therefore a Squadron of lusty Frigots was sent forth by this State under the Command of Sir George Ayscough toward the Sound, which having for some time been detained upon the Coast by contrary Winds, and afterwards steering their course towards those Northern Seas, which the extremity of the Winter had made innavigable, they were forced for that time to return not without some damage to the Ships, by reason of the Ice, and the loss of some men, through the bitterness of the weather in those parts, so that this Enterprize was suspended till the coming on of the Spring, and then a more powerful Fleet was set out under the Command of General Montague, Sir George Ayscough being invited by the King of Sweden to take upon him a chief Command in his Navy.

A Squadron of Ships sent towards the Sound.

Another greater Fleet set out under Gen. Montague.

In the mean time the Hollanders Fleet led by General Opdam, and Witte Witteson arriving at the Sound with relief for Copenhagen, were assailed by the Swedish Rix Admiral Charles Gustave Wrangle, in which Battel the Dutch are said to have received a notable Overthrow, seven of their Ships being lost, and Witte Witteson one of their Admirals, with many other persons of Quality slain; nevertheless during the Fight, several Dutch Fluyts and Merchant-men passed by with provision to Copenhagen, which so strengthened the besieged, that they thereby became inabled for the sustaining of a long Siege, as hath since appeared; and not long after, the Swedes in a resolute effort, against the City, were repelled with the loss of a great many men, and some of Eminency.

The Sea Fight between the Swedes and the Dutch.

Copenhagen relieved.

And now in England, want of Moneys, and other pressing occasions of the State, required the sudden calling of a Parliament: the young Protector issues out his Writs, summoning the Members to meet at Westminster the 27th of January. Elections are made by the Counties, not without some canvassing of Parties.

Moreover, according to the constitution of the Government, Members were elected to the Commons House for Ireland and Scotland, as well as England. The Elections were so disposed in England, that many honest Gentlemen in all parts were chosen, but the Upper (for it did not yet aspire to the Name of Lords) House, was filled with 1659 with the Chief Officers of the Army, whereof most were of such contemptible extraction and education, that the Commons were unwillingly brought in any capacity whatsoever to own them. From the time of Summons of this Parliament, to their convening, Richard was frequently entertained with the fore-mentioned Addressees, which much heightened the confidence he had entertained of his future Prosperity, and made him think of modelling the Council conformable to designs he had of subjecting the Army to his entire Command; for the Council, as the Government then stood, had a great co-ordination with him in the administration of it, and the major part consisted of such as countenanced in all their extravagancies the Officers of the Army, who were many of them Anabaptists, and of other Sects.

He endeavours to new model his Council.

The Army grows jealous and censorious of him.

He pretended not to remove any of the Councillors, but to add so many of his friends to them as might make the greater number firm to him, he proposed the Lord Broghil, and Faulconbridge who had married his Sister, but they were not approved of; and instead of these, it was offered by those that opposed them, that four Colonels of the Army might be admitted, (viz.) Whaley, Goff, Berry and Cooper: The first two had been of the late King's Judges, but were affected to the Protector and his Family; the other two were Factious and Seditious. These Transactions were not agitated in open Council, but privately treated of by particular Persons; but so rumored, that the Army began to be jealous of the Protector, and murmur at his Actions; sometimes they would complain of the Company and Conversation he used, and at other times censure his Religion, exclaiming that Godliness was discouraged by him, and that he rather favoured those of loose Principles, than the zealous Professors of the Gospel. But in this he was injured; for if his private Condition represented him a kind of Libertine, he assumed, together with the publick Person, a more grave and circumspect behaviour, conformed himself to the constant observation of all Religious Duties, and was in appearance at least, if not really so, of a blameless Life and Conversation.

The names of the Protector's Privy Council.

The Grandees of the Army, doubtful of the temper of the approaching Parliament, moved the Protector to call together some of the Officers of the Army to London, (as his Father was accustomed to do on the like occasions) to advise with him, to obviate any peril that might happen in the beginning of his Power, if the Parliament should attempt Innovations; He was a little surprized at this advice, but thought it not time to refuse it, and thereupon Letters were sent to as many of them as could be spared from their Charges to repair to London, to be there at the opening of the Parliament. The names of his Fathers Privy Councillors which acted and were continued under him, were Richard Lawrence President; Nathaniel Fiennes one of the Keepers of the Great Seal; John Thurloe, Secretary of State; General Montague, Sir Charles Woolsey, Colonel Philip Jones, Philip Lord Lisle, Son to the Earl of Leicester; Lieutenant General Fleetwood, Colonel Desborow, Sir Gilbert Pick-

1659 ring, Colonel Sydenham, Walter Strickland, Colonel Philip Skippon; of which the six last named, were Favourers and Abettors of the Army; Lawrence the President was an Anabaptist, but somewhat moderate in his Opinion; the Lord Lisle was often absent and uncertain, endeavouring as much as he could to appear a Neuter. There was another whom I should have named, which was Mr. Major, the Protector's Wives Father, but his indisposition of Health rendred him incapable of Action. Fleetwood and Desborow had frequent meetings at Desborow's House, who with the Factious part of this Council, and some of the Colonels of the Army that favoured them, which were Berry, Hewson, Cooper and Lilburn, consulted to wrest the Power of the Army out of the Protector's Hands, and in order thereunto, Desborow was sent to tell him, That the Army was filled with many jealousies and fears of Designs against it, which would put them into Mutiny, and inevitably hazard the subversion of the Government, unless some speedy remedy were taken for prevention; and that no better way could be thought on, than putting the Command of the Army into the hands of some person that had served with them, and of whose Courage and Integrity to their Cause, they might have confidence and assurance; and immediately named Fleetwood to be the man, adding, That this would not only satisfy the Army, but give great content to the Godly Party (which was a name much used by all these Novelists) and free him from much of the trouble, which rendred him now less intent in the more necessary parts of Government. To this he replied, that as to the fears and jealousies of the Army, when he knew their Grounds, he would give them what redress could be desired, not doubting but the Parliament now ready to sit down, would take care both for his and their security, and the peace and quiet of the Nations: But as to the Command of the Army, he freely told them, he should not think himself able to protect himself or them, if he should part with it, which his Fathers Example confirmed him in. And with this Answer dismissed him. His Father, as was before mentioned, was much perplexed before he died, with many Seditious Anabaptist Officers of the Army, who were impatient of his Government, but the fear and danger of a division, and respect to his person, kept them in some degree of Obedience; He displaced many of them before he died, and had reduced the rest, and wholly modelled the Army to depend on him, if he had lived a few moneths longer: he had introduced his Son, my Lord Faulconbridge, and many others into Chief Commands, who were allied to him in Blood, or by their advancement wholly depending on him: all this while matters were carried without much heat, and not out of possibility of accommodation when the Parliament sat down.

Seditious Meetings of the Factious Part of the Army and Council at Desborow's House. Desborow sent to the Protector to persuade him to resign the Command of the Army to Fleetwood.

Which he refuseth.

At the prefixed time, the Parliament meets, A Parliament consisting as the last Parliament had done in his Fathers time, of two Houses, the Commons, and the Other, (which now began to be called the Upper-House) for the first was chosen Speaker Chaloner Chute, a Lawyer, who within a short while fell sick unto death, as also Sir Lislebone Long, 1659 Long Recorder of London, who was chosen pro tempore in his stead; For the latter was chosen Nathaniel Fiennes Lord Keeper of the Seal. The Act of Recognition of the Protector to be chief Governor of the Commonwealth of England, Scotland, and Ireland, and the Dominions and Territories thereunto belonging: which was many days debated in parts, and at last part of it resolved in these words; viz. That it be part of this Bill to recognize and declare his Highness Richard Lord Protector and Chief Magistrate of the Commonwealth of England, Scotland, and Ireland, and the Dominions and Territories thereunto belonging. And it was added, That neither this nor any other Vote that is or shall be passed in order to this Bill, shall be of force or binding to the People until the whole be passed. The Protector liked well these Proceedings, and thought himself towards a good Settlement; but of those that were zealous for a Commonwealth, there was in this Parliament such a considerable number, who had so powerful Influence on publick Transactions, that to procrastinate the time, they cast in several previous Debates, in which, nevertheless, the Assertors of the Protectors Interest being more in number, carried things to their own Advantage by the major Vote, as particularly in the business of the Scotch and Irish Members to be continued in among them, and the owning of the Upper House, and holding an Entercourse with them, after a long Consultation in question of their Authority. However, the Factious Counsellours which abetted discontents in the Army, continued their Meetings to pursue their purpose of wresting the Command of the Army out of his hands, and putting it under Fleetwood.

The King creates new Commissioners for the management of his Affairs in England Several Designs had been in vain undertaken for His Majesties Restauration during the Usurpation of Oliver Cromwell, which were chiefly managed by the Earl of Oxford, the Lord John Belasis, Sir John Greenville, Sir William Compton, Colonel John Russel, and Sir Richard Willis, who for their supposed conduct of the privacy of their Counsels, were commonly called, The seall'd Knot: But, though nothing was more prudently and ingeniously contrived, all their Consultations were from time to time imparted to Thurloe by Sir Richard Willis, which was not yet known. Nevertheless, His Majesty about this time thought fit to appoint new Commissioners, and sent over into England a blank Commission dated at Brussels the eleventh day of March, in the eleventh year of his Reign, which was filled up with the Names of Arthur Ansley, Son to the Viscount Valentia; John Mordant, Brother to the Earl of Peterborough; Sir John Greenville, Sir Thomas Peyton, and William Legg; which was as followeth:

The Form of the Commission.

CHARLES by the Grace of God King of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c. To Our Right Trusty and well-beloved, &c. And to every of them Greeting. We do by these Presents Constitute and Appoint you Our Commissioners, giving you or any one or more of you Power to Treat with any our Subjects of our Kingdom of England, and 1659 Dominion of Wales, that are or have been in Arms against Us or Our Father of Blessed Memory, or that have contributed to the present Rebellion in England (excepting such as actually sate in Judgement for the taking away the Life of Our said Father, or pleaded as Counsel Learned against his Life, or attended as Ministers to that odious pretended Court, or laid hands on his Person in the execution of that horrid Murder) And to assure them in Our Name, That if they shall forsake the present Rebellion, and joyn heartily and effectually for the suppressing of the same, and for Our Restauration to the Rights due to Us by the Laws of God, and of that Our Kingdom; That then We will not only freely pardon their former opposing Us and Our dear Father, and all other their Crimes and offences in acting, adhering to, or complying with the said Rebellion, But, that We will Recompense and Reward such of them as shall by any remarkable Service merit of Us; either by reducing or rendering any Town, Fort, or Garrison of the Rebels into Our hands, or into the possession and power of you, or of any other Trustee employed by Us or you for Our Service: And what you or any one or more of you shall by vertue of this Our Commission in Writing under your hands, or the hands of any one or more of you, promise in Our Name in this kind, We shall Ratifie, and Confirm, and Perform. Given at Our Court at Brussels this eleventh day of March, 1659. in the Eleventh year of Our Reign.

These Gentlemen proceeded with much Wariness and Diligence in the execution of this Commission, the Effects whereof shall be made known hereafter; But in the mean time, we shall return to what passed between the Parliament and Army. Besides the private Meetings of some select Officers at Desborows House, the General Council of Officers (as they called themselves) met in Fleetwoods House, where they acted with as much formality, as if they had been the Supreme Legislators of the three Kingdoms.

It was a little before Cromwell's Death, that great preparation was begun for the setting forth of a Fleet to the help of the Swedes against the Danes, and that under the Command of General Mountague, nor did his Death put a stop thereunto, Sir George Ayscough being sent with a Squadron of Ships, though hindered from coming up to joyn with them, by reason of the freezing of those Seas, as hath been already mentioned: whereupon, for the better managing of the Charge, it was thought expedient that the House of Commons should be engaged in it, and a Narrative Report was made to them by Secretary Thurloe about the later end of February this year, concerning the State of the War betwixt the Crowns of Sweden and Denmark, in Relation to the Baltick Sea, and the command of the Sound. This took so far, as to gain a Vote for the providing a considerable Navy for the preservation of Trade, which was forthwith equipped, and General Montague sent with it to the Sound about the latter end of March, who was so straightned in his Commission, that he lay there without doing any thing, till he was called back by that part of the Long Parliament that subverted the Power that sent him.

The Upper House (as it now began to be called in a strain somewhat nearer Lords House) favoured the Military Council of Officers, but the Commons took much distaste at it, as if it portended a kind of Force upon their Councils. The Protector in the mean time advised with his Friends, how to free himself from the Embarrassments of the Officers of the Army; My Lord Faulconbridge, Colonel Ingoldsby, Colonel Bridge, Colonel Charles Howard, Major Knight, all Officers in the Army, and some few others, counselled him to send a Party to Desborow's house, to seize upon those that met there, which were eight or nine of the Chief Confederates, and immediately after to give their Commands to the next Officers to them, till he could have a fairer opportunity to put them into better hands; and to send for all the rest of the Officers to come to him, and to Command all of them to repair to their respective Commands, that were not obliged by Service in Parliament to attend that duty. These Counsels were very agreeable to his Inclination, but the Secretary of State and some others to whom he brake the business, diverted him from the first; but to the latter, of dismissing the Officers, he readily consented; and the next day he sent for them, and dismissed them accordingly: And the same day that this was by him done, the Commons openly debated against this Assembly of Officers, and Voted, That during the Sitting of the Parliament, there should be no General Council or Meeting of the Officers of the Army, without direction, leave, and authority of the Protector and both Houses of Parliament. And because in the Debate of these Questions, many that favoured the Army, had cunningly cast out some minatory Expressions, insinuating, That this way of proceeding might make them think themselves suspected, and provoke them to break forth into some act of opposition and disturbance, they passed another Resolve, That no person should have or continue Command in any of the Armies in England, Scotland, or Ireland, or any of the Dominions or Territories thereunto belonging, who shall refuse to subscribe, That he will not disturb or interrupt the free Meeting in Parliament of any the Members of either House of Parliament, or their freedoms in their Debates and Councils.

The Upper House
jealous of the proceedings of the Commons and the Protector.

These were transmitted to the Upper House, to be confirmed there; but they made a slow progress in them upon divers late contracted Jealousies, not the least of which was from a late Vote of the Commons, wherein they declared at the acknowledgement of their Constitution, That their acknowledgement of that House for another House of Parliament, should not prejudice the Peerage of the Land, or their Priviledges: as also believing, that the Protector conspired with the Commons to weaken and divide, or subdue the Power of the Army, in which they were somewhat confirmed; for that these Matters were Debated and Voted the same Day he had dissolved the Council of Officers, and dismissed them. The Protector had many of the Chief Officers of the Army fixed to him, but the inferior sort who were of Fanatick Opinions in Religion, and were more numerous, and had most influence upon the Souldiers, were for Fleetwood and Desborow: For it was artificially instilled into their Heads, That the Protector did intend to cast them out of their Places, and put the Army into the hands of the Nobility and Gentry of the Nations, thereby to bring in the King, and destroy that Liberty of the Gospel they had so long contended for. The Debate against the Army in the House of Commons, was on the nineteenth day of April, from which time the Meetings of the Officers were more frequent than before, and upon the two and twentieth day, the Protector was informed, that they would either themselves dissolve the Parliament, or compel him to do it. He called his Confidants about him, and made preparations against all accidents that might happen; and in the Evening many of his Friends encouraged him to take Horse, and appear in the Head of some Troops that were ready to receive him. While this was doing, the other Party had drawn up some men in the several Avenues to White-hall, and in Saint James's Fields, yet it was believed, if he had appeared with vigour and courage amongst them, respect of his person would have prevailed much with the Common Souldiers; but he was fearful and unresolved, of a Spirit unbecoming the Quality he assumed; and many of those about him were as irresolute as he; some advised one thing, some another, wasting their time in contradictions; and, as it happens in the Consultations of fearful people, they debated many things fit to be done, till the time was past to put them in execution. Desborow his Uncle came to him from the discontented Officers, and pressed him much to sign a Commission to Fiennes to dissolve the Parliament, which he a great while obstinately refused, till Desborow insolently told him, if he did it not, it should be done without him, and so urged by threats and importunities, he at length consented to it.

The Inferiour Officers of the Army jealous of the Commons and the Protector.

The discontented faction of the Army in a posture of hostility against the Protector.

He is forced by Desborow to sign a Commission to Fiennes for the dissolving of the Parliament.

The next Morning, the House of Commons having heard of these Transactions at White-hall, Adjourned themselves for three days: but this their Adjournment proved a total Dissolution; for those that had made this breach upon them, proceeded further to compleat their purposes, and besides the foresaid Commission directed to Fiennes, caused a Proclamation to come forth in the Protector's Name, to publish the Dissolution of the Parliament in these words;

W Hereas We summoned our High Court of Parliament to Assemble and meet together at Our City of Westminster the 27th of January last, which hath continued until this present day; And whereas we did by Our Commission under Our Great Seal of England bearing date at Westminster this present 22^d day of April

A Proclamation for the dissolution of the Parliament.

Rrrr

April for divers weighty Reasons declare Our Pleasure and Resolution to dissolve the said Parliament, and to that end did thereby constitute and appoint Our Right Trusty and Right well beloved Councillor Nathaniel Fiennes, One of the Lord Keepers of Our Great Seal of England, and other Our Commissioners in Our Name, this said present Twenty second day of April, to dissolve Our said Parliament, which was by them done according to the tenour of the said Commission in the usual place, and by vertue thereof our said Parliament is Dissolved: Nevertheless, We have thought it necessary with the Advice of Our Privie Council, by this Our Proclamation, to publish and make known the same, to the end all persons whom it may concern, may take notice thereof. Given at White-hall the twenty second day of April, in the year of our Lord, 1659.

Desborow and Fleetwood promise the Protector that his Power & Dignity should be continued.

Fleetwood and Desborow having (to get the power of the Army to them, and their Party) made this Breach upon the Parliament, and in it shaken the Protector's Government, intended of themselves, as it should seem, nothing less than to dethrone him, though by reason of what they had already done, they quickly found it was not in their power to prevent what they so little intended; they came to him together and apart several times that day after it was done, and protested to him, That his Power in all things, but the immediate Command of the Army, should be preserved intire; and even in that, nothing should be done, but in his Name, and by his privity; telling him, They had not taken this course, but upon certain Assurance of the Designs of the Kings Party, and others, to disturb the publick Peace, which nothing could prevent, but the breaking up of that Parliament.

The Officers of the Army oppose it.

He received not much Consolation from these Discourses, and gave little credit to them, well knowing, that it was far easier to draw the Officers of the Army into seditious courses, than to moderate them. He told them, he doubted not of their intentions, and that they had been practised upon to do that in haste, which they might have leisure enough to repent; and that they would find now they had made a Concussion of his power, it would be a Province too hard for them to re-settle it, and so it proved in effect; for at the first Meeting of the Officers at Wallingford House, after the emission of the fore-mentioned Proclamation, they would not hear of any thing in behalf of the Protector, and were so far from thinking of the continuance of his Power, that when any thing was moved tending that way, it was obstructed or diverted by Propositions of Government. Yet at last, when they had determined, that the Chief Command of the Army should be in Fleetwood, with a Power to dispose of all vacant Offices till farther Order, they were perswaded to allow the Protector a kind of Limited Supremacy (somewhat like that of a Duke of Venice.) But, the next day, whilst many of the Superiour Officers met at Wallingford House, in further consideration of a Model of Government, the inferiour Officers being the most numerous, assembled in the Chappel at St. James's, having Doctor Owen, and other Independent Ministers with them to assist at their Devotion, where the matter was artificially so contrived, that the prosperity they enjoyed under the latter part of the Commons House of the Long Parliament, was much magnified; with some intimations of Advice to return to that Government, with which the Auditors were very much affected, but nothing more was done at that time. This was promoted by Lambert and his Friends wherein he appeared not openly himself, but set Colonel Lilburn to manage the Business, at whose Chamber his Friends had private Junctiōes.

The next day Fleetwood and Desborow were alarmed with this Countermine against their Designs; for the Inferiour Officers came now to open Declaration of their forwardness to restore the latter part of the Long Parliament, and to restore to their Commands Lambert and the rest of the Officers who had been displaced by Oliver Cromwell for disaffection to him; yet with so much respect to the Protector, and his Family, that they would have an Honourable Provision made for them. Fleetwood endeavoured to oppose this Torrent, suspecting Lambert's Ambition would quickly supplant him, if he got Power: but when he perceived it was already too great to be resisted, the Consideration thereof obliged both him and Desborow to comply, for the preservation of their Authority. However, to retard their proceedings, they propose, first, to have the Army settled and modelled in a way of Unity before they determined upon the Government, which was thought rational; and at a Meeting of a General Council of Officers, in order thereunto, they removed the Protector from his Regiment, and the Colonels Ingoldsby, Howard, the Lord Faulconbridge, and Colonel Bridge from theirs: Colonel Norton they displaced from the Government of Portsmouth, which they gave to Colonel Whetham, and made Colonel Edward Salmon Governour of Hull, in the room of Colonel Smith, who, by the recommendation of Fleetwood, had the Command of that Garrison given him by Oliver Cromwell. To Colonel Sanders they gave the Protector's Regiment of Horse; to Colonel Rich that of Ingoldsby's; to Sir Arthur Hazlerig Colonel Howard's Regiment of Foot, with the Government of Berwick, Carlisle, and Tinnmouth: To Lambert they gave the Lord Faulconbridge's Regiment, and to Okey that which was his own before, which was lately commanded by Colonel Bridge: Major Packer, and Captain Gladman, Anabaptist Officers, who had been by Oliver Cromwell displaced were restored to their Commands: The Inferiour Officers, in all these respective Regiments, were suitably modelled according to the Opinion of their Colonels.

Thus Lambert was brought into the Army, wherein he quickly recovered much of his former power. After this, the Council of Officers was reduced to a smaller number.

The twenty ninth of April there met at Fleetwood's House, Lambert, Desborow, Sydenham, Cooper, John Jones, Berry, Hacker, Lilburn, Ashfield, Salmon, Zanchy, Okey, Sanders, Clark, all Colonels, and

The Superior Officers meet at Wallingford house to consider of a Model of Government, and the inferiour at St. James's.

Several Colonels removed from their Regiments and others put in their rooms. As likewise Governours of Towns and other Officers.

The Officers of the Army consult about restoring the Remnant of the Long Parliament.

1659 and Major General Kelsey, and Barkstead the Lieutenant of the Tower, where they debated the Election of a Council, which should have a Negative upon the Remnant Parliament, when it should be restored: But after much Debate, that was thought fitter for the Debate of the Parliament than them.

They next consult about some Articles, for the security of themselves and their Friends, and for a Foundation, on which they would oblige their Parliament to establish the Commonwealth Government.

They send These Articles being digested into form, and to treat agreed to by the General Council, a certain number of the Officers were deputed to meet with Sir Henry Vane, Sir Arthur Hazlerig, Mr. Scot, and Major Salloway, the prime leading men in this Parliament, to consider how they might be disposed to consent to them. Vane and those with him had been Treated with apart; but when they came to publick discourse, they were very reserved in their Answers; yet they gave them hopes of their consents, and of their endeavours to prevail upon others; but said, they could not undertake any previous Agreement, to oblige the Parliament, without their Authority and consent, at such time as they were met together.

This caution of theirs was disliked and suspected by Fleetwood, Desborow and Lambert; but the Inferior Officers were so far possessed in favour of them, that it was not time to contend. They therefore desired them to use means to draw as many of the Members as they could together with all convenient haste, because the Government was a kind of Inter-regnum; and the Officers in the mean time drew up a Declaration to invite them to sit, which upon the sixth of May was presented to the Speaker by Lambert, with about 13 or 14 Officers of the Army in his Company. The Declaration it self we have thought fit to insert, to shew the inconstancie of these new Politicians, that so soon altered from what they so solemnly declared; The Title was,

A Declaration of the Officers of the Army inviting the Members of the Long Parliament, who continued sitting till the 20th of April, 1653. to return to the Exercise and Discharge of their Trust.

The Armies Declaration to invite the Remnant of the Long Parliament to sit again.

THe Publick Concernments of this Commonwealth, being through a vicissitude of Dangers, Deliverances and Back-slidings of many, brought into that state and posture wherein they now stand, and our selves also contributing thereunto, by wandring divers ways from Righteous and Equal parts; And although there have been many Essays to obviate the Dangers, and to settle the Nations in peace and prosperity, yet all have proved ineffectual; The only wise God, in the course of his Providence, disappointing all Endeavours therein. And also observing to our great grief, that the good Spirit which formerly appeared amongst us, in the carrying on of this great Work, did daily decline; so as the Good Old Cause it self became a Reproach: We have been led to look back, and to examine the Cause of the LORD's withdrawing his wonted Presence from us, and where we turned out of the way, that through Mercy we might return and give him the Glory.

And amongst other things, calling to mind that the Long Parliament, consisting of those Members who continued their sitting until the 20th of April, 1653. were eminent Assertors of that Cause, and had a special Presence of GOD with them, and were signally blessed in that work (the Desires of many good People concurring with ours therein;) we judge it our Duty to invite the aforesaid Members, to return to the Exercise and Discharge of their Trust, as before the said 20th of April 1653.

And therefore we do hereby most earnestly desire the Parliament, consisting of those Members who continued to sit since the Year 1648. until the 20th of April 1653. to return unto the Exercise and Discharge of their Trust; and we shall be ready in our Places, to yield them, as becomes us, our utmost Assistance to sit in Safety, for the improving present Opportunities, for settling and securing the Peace and Freedom of the Commonwealth, praying for the Presence and Blessing of God upon their Endeavours.

Signed by the Direction of 6th of May the Lord Fleetwood, and the Council of Officers of the Army.

Thomas Sanford Secretary.

After the delivery of this, many of the most Eminent Members of this Remnant of the Long Parliament, having before consulted with as many of the rest as were in London, came also and gave a Visit to the Speaker, to signify their willingness to return to the Exercise of their Trust, (as they call'd it) in pursuance of the Invitation given them by the Army, and that they would meet the next morning, which was the 8th of May, at 8 of the Clock in the Painted-Chamber, where they desired his Presence to accompany them from thence to the Parliament-House; which he accordingly did, and they all went together, and took their Places. Thus ended the Reign, or rather the Usurpation of the Cromwells, being overthrown by those of their nearest Relations, from whom by Interest, they might have expected Support: But such was the Fate of this ill-acquir'd Dominion, to be subverted in its greatest Security, by the Ambition and Malice of those that assisted the Aspirers in the obtaining of it.

They agree to accept of the Invitation,

And take their places in the House.

Upon the Dissolution of the Protectors Parliament, diligence was used by Clarges to acquaint Monk with all Occurrences; but the Officers of the Army in Scotland, then in London, of Fleetwood's Party, had so dispersed Letters amongst their Friends, to ingage them for the restoring of this later part of the Long Parliament, that when he conven'd some of them at Edenburgh to sound their Tempers, he perceived they had been wrought upon; and therefore he judged it most prudent, to seem to approve of what was done: And to that purpose he writ a Letter signed by himself and his Officers, to the Officers at London, which gave them Assurance of his Adherence to them; (but if Richard had not dissolved his Parliament, Monk had then marched into England in favour of it.) They did not fear much any storms from the Army in Ireland, who of themselves could do little, without correspondence from England or Scotland.

The first thing the Remnant-Parliament did when they met, after Election of their Officers, was the passing a short Declaration, which was ordered to be Printed and Published; in the Close whereof they declare; That they are Resolved through the Gracious Assistance of Almighty GOD, to apply themselves to the Faithful Discharge of the Trust reposed in them; and to endeavour the Settlement of this Commonwealth upon such a Foundation as may assert, establish and secure the Property and Liberties of the People in reference unto all, both as Men and as Christians; and that without a Single Person, Kingship, or House of Peers: And shall vigorously endeavour the carrying on of Reformation, so much desired, and so often declared for; to the end there may be a Godly and Faithful Magistracy and Ministry upheld and maintained in the Nations, to the Glory and Praise of our Lord Jesus Christ, and to the reviving and making glad the Hearts of the Upright in the Land.

kept out.

Sir George Booth, Colonel Rossiter, Mr. Pryn, and some others, Members of the Commons House of Pryn, and this Parliament, (formerly secluded by the Army) attempted to go into the House, but were all kept back by Adjutant Gen. Allen, except Mr. Pryn who slipt in, but they would do nothing whilst he was amongst them, but adjourned till the afternoon; and when he again would have entered, he was staid by some Officers of the Army.

About four days after the present small Parliament had sate, which was spent in making a Committee of Safety, and dispatching Intelligence of their being re-instated in their former Power, to several of their Members absent in the Country, whom they had not disabled from Sitting; the Officers of the Army present themselves with their Petition and Address, a thing they often insisted to have prosecuted, and was one of the occasions that heightened the differences betwixt them and this Parliament.

The Title was, The Humble Petition and Address of the Officers of the Army, to the Parliament of the Commonwealth of England. The Address itself was in these words following:

Calling to mind the former Declarations of Parliament, and the Grounds therein inviting us to take up Arms, and those many signal Providences, wherein the Lord hath owned You and your Forces both by Sea and Land, in asserting that Righteous Cause, wherein the Civil and Religious Liberties of the people of these Nations were involved, so as that all open opposition was beaten down before you; and likewise weighing with our selves how in the several late Changes in Government, that publick Spirit which appeared in that Work, hath since that time been discouraged, and another raised up, drawing back to the same things you had contended against, even to the hazarding the Essentials of that Cause; we did upon serious thoughts of heart think it our duty once more to appear against those back-sliding ways: and Providence having brought the state of Affairs to the condition they were in some few days before your sitting, we found it necessary to assert amongst our selves some of the Fundamentals of our Good Old Cause, with some other things conducing to the Preservation thereof, with a full and fixed resolution, through the Assistance of GOD, effectually even to the hazard of our Lives to endeavour the Recovery and security of the same. And the same Good Providence holding forth an opportunity to us, to open unto You a Way for the further discharge of your remaining Trust in Parliament, we did by our Declaration of this instant May, humbly desire you would be pleased to return to the exercise and discharge thereof, as before the 20th of April, 1653. And having to our great rejoicing seen your Declaration of the seventh Instant, shewing, that you are resolved through the Gracious Assistance of Almighty GOD, to apply your selves to the faithful discharge of the Trust reposed in you; and to endeavour the Settlement of this Commonwealth upon such a Foundation, as may assert, establish and secure the Liberties of the People, in reference unto all, both as Men and Christians, and that without a Single Person, Kingship, or House of Peers, resolving vigorously the carrying on the Work of Reformation, so much desired, and so often declared for, to the end there may be a Godly and faithful Magistracy and Ministry upheld and maintained in these Nations; which so fully answers what our hearts were drawn 1659 drawn forth to desire, that we could not any longer forbear to express our thankfulness for this door of hope again, opened towards the attaining a consummation of those things so much breathed after by the good People of this Commonwealth. And however we find our selves in some measure prevented, by the late Declaration and Resolves of this Parliament: Yet this nevertheless we have judged it our Duty to represent what was chiefly and unanimously upon our hearts, when we engaged in that which made way for your Return, which we humbly (as becomes us) lay before you:

1. That the Liberty of the Persons, and Property of the Estates of all Free People of these Nations, be maintained, preserved, and kept inviolable according to Law, under the Government of a Free State and Commonwealth, without a Single Person, Kingship, or House of Peers.

2. That there may be such a just and due Regulation of Law, and Courts of Justice and Equity, as that they may be a Protection, and not vexatious or oppressive to the People of these Nations.

3. That by an Act of Oblivion, all and every person and persons who have since the 19th of April, 1653. mediately or immediately advised, acted, or done any matter or thing whatsoever, in reference to the several Changes or Alterations in the Government of these Nations since the said 19th of April, 1653. or in order to the Publick Service, Peace, or Safety of these Nations, be Indemnified and saved harmless, to all intents and purposes whatsoever.

4. That all Laws, Ordinances, Declarations, and Establishments made in the several Changes and Alterations of Government, that have been in these Nations since the 19th of April aforesaid, and not as yet particularly repealed, be deemed good in Law, until particularly repealed.

5. That such Debts as have been contracted for the Publick Service and Affairs of this Commonwealth, and for the Charges of the Government, since the twentieth of April, 1653. be carefully paid and satisfied.

6. That all persons who profess Faith in GOD the Father, and in Jesus Christ his Eternal Son the true God, and in the 1659 Holy Spirit, God Co-equal with the Father and the Son, one God blessed for ever, and do acknowledge the Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testament to be the revealed or written Word or Will of God, shall not be restrained from their Profession, but have due encouragement and equal protection in the profession of their Faith and exercise of Religion, whilst they abuse not their Liberty to the civil injury of others, or disturbance of others in their way of Worship: So that this Liberty be not extended to Popery or Prelacy, nor to such as shall practise or hold forth licentiousness or prophaneness under the profession of Religion: And that all Laws, Statutes, Ordinances, and Clauses in any Laws, Statutes, or Ordinances to the contrary, may be declared null and void.

7. That a Godly, Faithful and Painful Gospel-Preaching Ministry be every where encouraged, countenanced, and maintained.

8. That the Universities and Schools of Learning be so countenanced and reformed, as that they may become the Nurseries of Piety and Learning.

9. That such persons as have at any time since the twentieth of May, 1642. aided, or assisted, or adhered to the late King, Charles Stuart his Son, or any other person or persons whatsoever of that Party, against the Parliament or Commonwealth of England, and all other persons whatsoever that have made use of any Authority or Power under pretence of Law, or otherwise, to deprive or abridge any of the good People of these Nations of their Christian Liberty, or have or shall express themselves in any way mockers, scoffers, or revilers of Godliness, or of the Professors thereof, or are otherways scandalous or loose in their conversations, or have not given good satisfaction of their affection and faithfulness to this Cause, may be speedily removed out of all places of Power or Trust in the Magistracy, or other management of the Publick Affairs of these Nations, and that no such persons may be admitted unto any such Place of Power or Trust for the future.

10. And forasmuch as no godly or other good Interest can be preserved, or maintained, unless the persons who are chiefly 1659 chiefly intrusted with the management and exercise of the Government, be of suitable Spirits to those Interests, That those who are or shall be intrusted therein, be such persons as shall be found to be most eminent for Godliness, faithfulness, and constancy to the good Cause and Interests of these Nations.

11. That to the end the Legislative Authority of this Commonwealth may not by their long sitting become burthensome or inconvenient, there may be effectual Provision made for a due Succession thereof.

12. And for the better satisfaction, and more firm Union of the Forces of this Commonwealth, in this juncture of Affairs, for preserving and maintaining the Principles and other matters thereunto subservient, We do unanimously acknowledge and own the Lord Charles Fleetwood Lieutenant General of the Army, to be Commander in Chief of the Land-Forces of this Commonwealth.

13. That in order to the establishing and securing the Peace, Welfare, and Freedom of the People of these Nations for the ends before expressed, the Legislative Power thereof may be in a Representative of the People, consisting of a House successively chosen by the People in such way and manner as this Parliament shall judge meet, and of a select Senate, Co-ordinate in Power, of able and faithful Persons, eminent for Godliness, and such as continue adhering to this Cause.

14. That the Administration of all Executive Power of Government, may be in a Council of State, consisting of a convenient number of Persons qualified in all respects as aforesaid.

15. That all Debts contracted by his late Highness, or his Father, since the fifteenth of December 1653, may be satisfied, and that an honourable Revenue of Ten Thousand pounds per annum, with a convenient House, may be settled upon him, and his Heirs for ever; and Ten thou-

1659 sand pounds per annum more upon him during Life: And upon his Honourable Mother Eight thousand pounds per annum during her life, to the end a mark of the high Esteem this Nation hath of the good Service done by his Father, our ever Renowned General, may remain to Posterity. These having been the Thoughts and Desires of our Hearts, unanimously agreed upon before Your returning to Sit, and finding the spirits of divers of the honest faithful People of this Commonwealth led forth for the same things, and your selves by your late Declaration and Resolutions in a great measure assisting them; We thought it our Duty to the Nations, to You, and to the Honest People, humbly to present these, and beg the Blessing and Presence of the Lord with you in the prosecution and bringing forth such a Settlement as may be for the Honour of God, the Union, Joy and Rejoycing of all the peaceable People of the Commonwealth.

And we shall pray, &c.

This Petition was presented by Lambert the twelfth day of May, accompanied with Desborow and Barkstead the Lieutenant of the Tower, with twelve other Colonels, and two Lieutenant Colonels, we find entred in the Parliament Journal the words which Lambert spake at the delivery of it, which were these:

Mr. Speaker,

WE are Commanded by the Officers of the Army, to present before you their humble Petition and Address; there are several things contained in it, which have been a long time upon their Hands and no visible way of redress: Finding to their great Joy and Satisfaction, that you are Returned; In discharge of thir Trust, they thought it not fit to neglect this opportunity, but have Commanded us to present this Petition.

When he had said these words, he withdrew with those that were with him; and the House upon Debate Order'd their Speaker to return them the following Answer, which is likewise entered in the Journal of that Dayes proceedings.

I am

The Speakers
Speech.

I Am commanded by the House to tell you, That they have read the Petition and Address that you have made here to Us; They have commanded me likewise to tell you, That as they found your Affection before they came hither, so they find that Affection continuing.

For the things contained in your Petition, they are things of great weight, and many more things of great weight are lying before the House; and it is concerning the Settlement, for which the Divine Providence of GOD hath brought us hither, who we hope shall never depart from us.

The House finds in your Advice much of Love and Affection, and have commanded me to acknowledge that Love and Affection you have shewn, and to give you thanks, very hearty thanks for your love and expressions of it; And accordingly in their Name I do give you very hearty thanks.

The House by Votes agreed to all the Articles of this Petition at the first Debate of it, except such as concerned the publick Revenue, Government, and the Protector, which were referred to a Committee, whom they directed to go to the Protector, and receive an acknowledgment from him of his Submission to the Government, before they would do any thing for him, and to take a State of his Debts: which being declared to him, with the Resolve of the House, the occasion of that Message: After Consideration, he delivered the following answer to them in Writing, with his name to it.

The Protector
Richard's Submission to the Powers in being.

I Have perused the Resolve and Declaration which you were pleased to deliver to me the other night, and for the information touching what is mentioned in the said Resolve, I have caused a true state of my Debts to be transcribed and annexed to this Paper, which will shew what they are, and how they were contracted.

As to that part of the Resolve, whereby the Committee are to inform themselves, how far I do acquiesce in the Government of this Commonwealth, as it is declared by this Parliament.

I trust my past Carriage hitherto hath manifested my Acquiescence in the Will and Disposition of GOD, and that I Love and value the Peace of this Commonwealth much above my own concerns; and I desire that by this, a measure of my future Deportment may be taken, which through the Assistance of GOD shall be such as shall bear the same Witness, having, I hope, in some degree learned rather to reverence and submit to the hand of GOD, than to be unquiet under it. And (as to the late Providences that have fallen out amongst us) however in respect of particular Engagements that lay upon me, I could not be active in making a change in the Government of the Nations, yet thorow the Goodness of GOD, I can freely acquiesce in it, being made, and do hold my self obliged as (with other men) I expect Protection from the present Government, so to demean my self with all peaceableness under it, and to procure to the utmost of my Power that all in whom I have any Interest, do the same.

Richard Cromwel.

A Schedule of his Debts was annexed to this Paper: what was contracted for the Funeral of his Father, they absolutely rejected, and made slow progress in the rest, and delayed to settle any Revenue upon him or his Mother, as was desired; but gave him two thousand pounds to discharge part of his own private Debts, and required him and all his Dependents, to remove from White-Hall in six days. Fleetwood discovered a little Discontent at this contempt put upon his Brother Cromwel, and that Family; but as soon as it was ordered that he should be Commander in Chief of all the Armies and Land Forces in England, Scotland and Ireland, for one year, in compliance with the twelfth Article of the Armies Petition and Address, he was left solicitous in the concerns of his Wifes Family: When the House voted he should Command the Armies, they likewise voted, He should have Power to Sign and Seal such Commissions for the Constitution of Officers under him, as should be approved by the Parliament, and nominated by Sir Henry Vane, Sir Arthur Haslerig, Lieutenant General Fleetwood, and the Colonels, Lambert, Desborow, Ludlow, and Berry, or the major part of them, who were made Commissioners for that purpose. And for his better Establishment, they directed a Bill to be prepared and brought into the House to be passed into an Act for his Constitution; which was done accordingly; but upon the second reading of it, they would not admit of that Clause, to Authorize him to Sign Commissions, but Ordered, That all Commissions, both to the Commission-Officers of the Army, and the Captains of the Fleet, should be signed by the Speaker of the Parliament of the Commonwealth of England, to be written by the Clerks attending the Council of State, and delivered to the Officers gratis, by the Speaker in the Parliament House. They also at the same time Ordered, That the Government of Ireland should be by Commissioners nominated, and appointed by Parliament, and not by one Person, and that Colonel Henry Cromwel should be acquainted with the Order, and required forthwith to repair to the Parliament. This Gentleman had made himself very popular in Ireland, in his Government of that Kingdom, under his Father, and his Brother; but in regard there was a Council co-ordinate with him in civil matters, many of the Members whereof were of severe and rigid behaviour, the generosity of his Disposition was somewhat over-ruled; nevertheless, most people in distress there did receive such Effects of his Civility, where he had any manner of capacity to shew it, That they acknowledged he deserved to have been the Son of a better Father.

He had the Irish Army under good Discipline, and was so well beloved of the Officers, that it is probable he would not have consented to the change of Government; if he had had time to prepare against it; For his Brother gave him no intimation of what had hapned, nor any Commands to appear on his behalf; what he had heard, being only from the intelligence of private Friends. At the first Alarm, he advised with his Confidants what to do, and to prevent Confederacies against him, by any Com-

Henry Cromwel called from the Government of Ireland.

Combinations of the Officers of his Army he commanded all of them to their Charges, and (to use his own words) not to hearken to any design of Innovation, how speciously soever the same might be presented to them. Likewise he dispatched Cornet Monk to Scotland to General Monk (who came thither not till fifteen dayes after the alteration of the Government) to inform himself how he and his Army stood affected to it, who returned no other answer than a Copy of the Letters the Officers of his Army had obliged him to send to the Parliament.

In all probability, if Colonel Henry Cromwell had drawn his Army together, and fixed them to his Authority, and then declared against their proceedings at London, he might have shaken much the new foundation of the Commonwealth; for the Armies in England and Scotland were not then modelled, and the Officers many of them (as hath been said) Relations or Dependents of the Family of the Cromwells; but he was so doubtful of the success, that he undertook nothing, but peaceably submitted as his Brother had done, (though in more generous terms) to the Authority then introduc'd.

We purposely omit many particulars of these transactions, and others in the Journals of the Parliament, as their Constitutions of a Council of State for the more immediate executive Power of the Commonwealth, the Nomination of Judges, Commissioners of the Great Seal, and Commissioners for the Admiralty, and Government of the Navy, and Colonel Henry Cromwell's Letter to the Parliament, when he submitted to it, as not very essentially pertinent to this History.

Fleetwood and his Friends were troubled at the restriction of his Commission, yet he dissimulated his passion, and yielded to necessity, till a more favourable conjunction might give him opportunity to enlarge his power: however, both he, Desborow, Lambert, and many of them were dissatisfied with the way of receiving their Commissions from the hands of the Speaker, and would have remonstrated against it; but by enquiring into the temper of the inferior Officers, they found them well enough affected towards it, and therefore did not proceed for that time. And Fleetwood himself, to dissimulate his acquiescence with great Submission and Protestation of Obedience to the Parliament, received his Commission in the House, from the Hands of the Speaker, and after him Lambert, Desborow, Berry, Ludlow, Sydenham, and the rest of them in and about London, who had Commands in the Army.

The Parliament now became confident of its Power, and meditated to subject the Army wholly to it (which made them jealous of each other.) Although all the Armies and Navy had declared their concurrence in obedience to them; yet they displaced those Officers in both, whom they suspected in any manner to have been affected to Cromwell, or Monarchical Government. The seven Commissioners before named, to whom the nomination of the Officers of the Army was first committed, were continued in that Authority and very active in it. Those of the Anabaptist perswasion, were by them esteemed most firm to a Commonwealth, and by their Information they were much guided in the disposition of Places; but where any had been put out by Cromwell, for dissatisfaction to him, they were restored as of course. Colonel Lockhart Governour of Dunkirk, had made his submission; but shortly after, there was a desperate mutiny in the Garrison, at first suspected to be for the King, but it was quickly appeased, and found to be otherwise. And the better to regulate the Affairs there, and quiet the place, Lieutenant Colonel Pierston, Colonel Ashfield, and Colonel Packer, are forthwith sent over. Thus all things succeeded fortunately to them. Embassadors from all parts making haste to congratulate the felicity of their Government.

The Embassador from the United Provinces, was prepared with his Credentials for Audience within a fortnight after the first beginning of this new Commonwealth, and at his Audience, in the name of his Masters, he made a more than ordinary Profession of Amity, and desire of Unity and Confederacy with them. The Commissioners who had that in Charge, made great dispatch both in modelling the Army and Navy. Pierston and Mason two Anabaptists, Lieutenant Colonels under General Monk, undertook to know so well the Army in Scotland, that their information was much credited in the settling of it, and to weaken Monk's Power, they had designed to remove those he most trusted, and put others of their own Creatures into their places. Of all these passages the General had very good Intelligence; his Agent Clarges not omitting to acquaint him with all that passed with these Commissioners. And after a while he took publick notice of it in a Letter to the House, in which, among other expressions, he told them he had heard of their Intentions to displace many of his Officers, which he conceived they did not from any knowledge they had of their Persons or Qualifications, but the informations of others; and that he thought himself as fit to be credited in that matter as any, and did assure them, they were all honest and stout Men, and such for whose Fidelity and good Behaviour he would be engaged.

This Letter put a little stop to their Carriere, but did not divert their Resolutions: yet to give him some satisfaction, they sent him back word, they would be very careful in the placing or displacing of his Officers, and that in his own Regiments of Horse and Foot, there should be no alteration till such time as he were consulted in it. Monk was not satisfied with their Answer, but privately advised some of those Officers, whom he heard they would put from their Commands, to go to London, to solicit their own Concernments, and as much as they could obstruct and retard the proceedings of the Committee. That which was of most advantage to the preservation of his Officers, was an Order made, That such Officers as were new constituted for Scotland or Ireland, because they could not come to the Parliament to take their Commissions, should receive them from such Commissioners as should be appointed for the Civil Government of those Kingdoms doms respectively. And none being yet appointed for Scotland, that Affair rested a while in suspense, yet was not so far neglected as to hinder the designment of the remove of many, whom nevertheless the General underhand kept still in their Commands, till further order.

An Old Act of Assessment revived.

In the pretended Parliament begun at Westminster, in the Year 1656, An Act had passed for a three years Assessment upon England, Scotland and Ireland, at thirty five thousand pounds per menssem on England, six thousand per menssem on Scotland, and nine thousand a Moneth on Ireland, to determine the 24th of June 1660, of which one years proportion was yet uncollected, which made the House to pass an Act on the 18th of June this year, to authorize the collecting of that money, knowing it to be less difficult to continue a Tax already imposed, than after the expiring of that to raise a new one. In this Act, they appoint the whole years Assessment to be paid into the Treasury, one Moiety on or before the tenth of August, and the other on the tenth of October.

Commissioners appointed for the Government of Ireland.

Having, as is aforesaid, recalled Colonel Henry Cromwell from Ireland, they appoint for the Civil Government of that Kingdom certain Commissioners, namely, Steele, Robert Goodwyn, Matthew Thomlinson and John Jones; and for the Command of the Army, Colonel Edmund Ludlow, who with the Title of Lieutenant General was immediately upon receipt of his Commission dispatched away.

The Kings Commissioners active endeavours to raise the Country for his Majesties Service.

In the mean time, the Kings Commissioners were not idle in ingaging as many as they could for his Service; and Captain Titus was sent by his Majesty to treat with Major General Brown, and such others in the City of London as he knew to be well inclined to his Interest. When he came to London and sent to Brown, he refused to have any Communication with him, and therefore he used the mediation of Mr. Charlton, and Mr. Beverly of Lincolns-Inne to treat with him, and they had several Conferences without any effect; for he being a Prudent Wary Man, was unwilling to hazard himself till he saw some Body of Men together, to busie the Army, and divert the Forces in London and Westminster. Titus then addressed himself to Mr. Mordant and the rest of his Majesties Commissioners, and was very assistant to them. So Active were these Commissioners, that most of the Nobility and Gentry of England and Wales were engaged by them, and a day in July fixed for the Rising. Sir George Booth was to raise Lancashire and Cheshire. Sir Thomas Middleton, Shropshire and Flintshire. Sir John Carter, Denbighshire. The Earl of Stamford, Leicestershire. The Lord Willoughby of Parham, (who also advanced money to buy Arms) Suffolk. Colonel Rossiter, Lincolnshire. Colonel Popham, Somersetshire and Wiltshire, and to secure Bristol and Taunton. Mr. Edward Dunch and others, Berkshire. Major General Maffey, and the Lord Herbert of Worcester, and Mr. How, Gloucestershire. Sir William Compton, Sir Thomas Levertborp and Mr. Fanshal, Hartfordshire. Mr. Mordant, Sir Francis Vincent, and Sir Adam Brown, Surrey; with many more in all places too long to name.

The first Rising was to be of such as had never engaged on the Kings side in the late Wars, thereby to draw the Army to less opposition; for the Declaration had no mention of his Majesty, but was called, The Declaration of the Lords, Gentlemen and Citizens, Freeholders and Yeomen, in this once happy Nation. The words of it were these:

Since it hath pleased Almighty God to suffer the Spirit of Division to continue in this distracted Nation, and to leave us without any settled Foundation of Religion, Liberty, and Property, the Legislative Power usurped at pleasure, and contemned; the Army raised at first for our Defence abused, and misled into unwarrantable Actions by the Cunning and Ambition of some of the Superior Officers; no Face of Government appearing either in any Single Person, or a Body of Men in Council lawfully constituted, to whom the Grievances of the People may with any probability of Success be properly addressed. Therefore We being Conscious of our Duty, and sensible of our own and the Nations Ruine, if these Distractions continue, or issue in a more fixed oppression by some Settlement inconsistent with the Laws, Peace and Interest of these Nations, have taken Arms in Defence of Our selves, and all others who will partake with Us in the Vindication and Maintenance of the Freedom of Parliaments, against all Violence whatsoever of the known Laws, Liberty, and Property of the Good People of this Nation, who at present groan under Illegal, Arbitrary, and Insupportable Taxes and Payments unknown to our Ancestors. This being our Duty to GOD and to Man, and our only Design, we cannot despair of the Blessing of him who gives Victory; nor of the chearful concurrence of all Good People, nor of the undeceived part of the Army, whose Arrears and increase of future Pay, and Advancement of high Command, We shall by all means procure, suffering no Imposition of force on any mans Conscience; And to this We doubt not but all honest English-men will say, Amen, Amen.

The Declaration of Sir George Booth committed at the time of his Rising.

But yet many of the Kings Friends in all parts were to bring in their Aids, Colonel Richard Arundel and Trelanny undertook, if his Majesty would bring five hundred Horse into Cornwall, and Arms for as many more, they would raise the other five hundred: And Major General Egerton did as much in Staffordshire; and many others in other Parts. The Preparation could not be expedited with that haste as was intended, so that the day of Rising was deferr'd to the first of August, and Mr. Cooper was sent by Mr. Mordant to his Majesty to acquaint him with it; who was so soon dispatched, that he returned in five days to those that sent him to let them know, his Majesty would be present with them in a short time: With him Colonel Roger Whitley came into England, with some verbal Instructions to Sir George Booth, and some blank Commissions to disperse in Lancashire, Cheshire and Flintshire; He staid no longer in London, than to receive Mr. Mordant's Commands, and some of the forementioned Declarations to carry with him to Booth. Captain Titus was sent to the King, to let him know all was ready: His Majesty there-

Sir George Booth's Rising aided by the Kings Friends from all Parts

His Majesty thereupon remov'd privately from Brussels to Calais, about the first of August, which was two days after Titus came to him: He had in his Company only the Marquess of Ormond, the Earl of Bristol, Dr. Quatermaine, Mr. Daniel Oneal, and one Maurice Delaval, a Servant of the Marquess of Ormond's, with two other Servants, one belonging to the Earl of Bristol, and the other to Oneal, nor did they travel thither together, but by two and two: His Majesty had only Dr. Quatermaine with him, and the first place he came to from Brussels was a little Village where Monsieur Marfin met him, with whom he had much discourse about his Affairs. Marfin accompanied his Majesty to S. Omers, where they parted; and then he went directly to Calais, where the rest met him; but to avoid being known, they dispersed into several Lodgings, and his Majesty had with him only Maurice to wait on him. The Dukes of York and Gloucester, were at Breda, and were sent for to Brussels, but they arrived not till the day the King parted from thence, and after he was gone. The Duke of York with Titus followed his Majesty to Calais, but the Duke of Gloucester by his Majesty's appointment continued at Brussels, ready prepared to come over upon the first intimation. The King staid three days at Calais, and a Shallop was ready at Bulloign for his Transportation into Kent, upon the first news of any considerable Parties being in Arms.

The main of the Design prevented by discovery: But in the height of this Expectation, one Mr. Baron arrived from Mordant with the ill News of the disappointment of much of the Design in all the South and West parts of England, which was thought to be discovered by a Letter intercepted at Reading from the Lady Mary Howard, about the latter end of July; but it was known long before that Letter, to Scot, and some few other Members of the Council of State, which hastened them so much in a more than usual care in modelling the Army, and settling the whole Militia of the Kingdom, wherein the meanest Commission-Officer in any of the Trained Bands, Troops, or Companies, was to be approved in Parliament, and they had privately laid a contrivance to have Soldiers at most of the Risings of the King's Friends all over England: So that their accidental intercepting of the Lady Mary Howard's Letter by the officious diligence of a Post-Master, was rather a Service than a disadvantage to his Majesty, since thereby his coming to England, which might have exposed his Person to inevitable Peril, was prevented. Notice of this discovery could not be soon enough dispersed to prevent the appearance of many Gentlemen in divers parts. The Earl of Lichfield, with Sir Adam Brown, my Lord Mordant, (so we now stile him, in regard he here first declared his having received the Dignity of Viscount) and about twenty five others Rendezvoused near Guilford in Surrey but by reason of the taking of Sir Francis Vincent an active Servant of the Kings, there was so little appearance, that all divided to shift for themselves: the Earl of Lichfield and my Lord Mordant came disguised by Water in the Common Barge from Chertsey to London, and got privately to Alderman Robinson's House, where they were for a while concealed.

The most considerable Body that got together was under Sir George Booth, who with the Earl of Derby, the Lord Kilmurry, and Major General Egerton, were met at the time appointed at Warrington, at first with a small Party; but they having the very Flower of the Gentry and Gallantry engaged among them, their numbers increased every minute: Colonel Roger Whitley delivered his Message to Sir George Booth from his Majesty, and the Declarations he had received from the Lord Mordant, with an account of his Majesty's Preparations beyond the Seas, and his readiness to come over upon the first notice; which was no small Satisfaction and Joy to the whole Party, which then consisted of about Five hundred men. The first thing they resolved, was to march towards Chester, and the first night they marched to a place called Tradsum, where they met Colonel Werden, who assured them that the Gates of Chester would be opened to them: And the next day they marched thither, and took possession of the Town, but the Castle was defended against them by Croxton the Governour thereof for the Parliament, who had one Company in it. The next day Major General Egerton was sent with a Party to Chirk-Castle, where Sir Thomas Middleton hearing of his approach, opened the Gates and joyfully received him. The next day he went with them to Wrexham (having left his Son to command the Castle for the King) and there many came in to them. The next day after, Colonel Whitley was sent with a Party to put a Garrison into Harding-Castle in Flint-shire, which was newly left by a Party of the Parliament Soldiers that marched from thence to Denbigh-Castle their next Garrison, but were seized by the Country, and brought Prisoners to Sir George Booth's Party. Colonel Ireland at the same time declared for them in Le- verpool, and Mr. Brooks one of the present Members of the House of Commons, willing to expiate his former mistakes, cordially joyned with them for the freedom of his Countrey, and met at the first Rendezvous.

The Parliament somewhat apprehensive of these Proceedings, caused all the Houses in and about London to be seized, and all the Avenues to the City to be guarded, and divers Troops and Companies to be placed in all the ways toward the West and North-west Parts. They had every hour news of the dispersing of several little Parties, and Lambert was ordered with a Brigade to march to suppress Sir George Booth and his Party. The Lord Mordant, as the most active Agent for his Majesty, was summoned on a great penalty to appear; and Mr. Edmund Dunch and Brooks, Mr. Monk two Members of the House whom they suspected to be engaged for the King, were on the penalty of a hundred pounds a piece required to attend the service of the House.

Mr. Nicholas Monk, a Reverend Minister, a Person of most firm Loyalty to his Majesty, and the only Brother to General Monk, came at this time to London in his way to Scotland, from Sir Hugh Pollard, Sir Thomas Stukely, and others of his Majesty's Friends in the West of England.

Sir George Booth appears with several others in a considerable Body.

They take possession of Chester City, but the Castle holds out against them.

England. His business was to engage his Brother in his Majesties Cause, to promote the present Design being directed to receive further Instructions from Sir John Greenville. He came directly to Mr. Clarges before he saw any one, and communicated his business to him, and afterwards to Greenville, who much encouraged his undertaking, and shewed him two Letters he had received from his Majesty, one to General Monk, and the other to himself; which may not be impertinent to this History to be here inserted, to manifest the great Vigilance of His Majesty, whose eye was in every place where he had any prospect of assistance to his Affairs. That to Monk was as followeth:

SIR,

His Majesties Letters to General Monk and Sir John Greenville. I Cannot think you wish me ill, for you have no reason so to do, and the good I expect from you, will bring so great a benefit to your Country, and to your self, that I cannot think you will decline my Interest. The Person who gives or sends this to you, hath Authority to say much to you from me; and if you once resolve to take my Interest to heart, I will leave the way and manner of declaring it intirely to your own Judgment; And will comply with the Advice you shall give me. The rest I refer to the person who conveys this to you; and it is in your Power to make me as kind to you as you can desire, and to have me always

Your Affectionate Friend,

July 21st 1659.

CHARLES R.

The other was to Sir John Greenville of the same date, in these words, Viz.

His Majesties Letter to Sir John Greenville. I Am confident that George Monk can have no Malice in his heart against me; nor hath he done any thing against Me which I cannot easily pardon, and it is in his Power to do Me so great Service, that I cannot easily Reward, but I will do all I can; and I do Authorize you to treat with him; and not only to assure him of my Kindness, but that I will very liberally Reward him with such an Estate in Land, and such a Title of Honour as himself shall desire, if he will declare for me, and adhere to my Interest: And whatsoever you shall promise to him on my behalf, or whatever he, or you by his Advice, shall promise to any of his Officers, or the Army under his Command (which Command he shall still keep) I will make good and perform upon the Word of a King.

CHARLES R.

Greenville earnestly pressed to have Clarges in gaged, and Mr. Monk moved it to him, with a promise of Great Advantage from his Majesty upon his Restitution. Clarges Replied, That he needed not these Temptations to oblige him to his Duty; and refused to have any Discourse concerning those Matters with Sir John Greenville at that time, well knowing, that the least jealousy of his actions from those in power, might make him useless for that future Service which could not be done without him.

But because all the ways to Scotland were obstructed, he took care to provide a Frigate for the Transporting of Mr. Nicholas Monk thither, and convey'd him safe on Shipboard fully instructed how to manage his Negotiations with Caution, and to communicate with none but the General, except Dr. Samuel Barrow Physician to the Army, a very discreet Gentleman, and Mr. John Price his Chaplain: The first of which was ejected out of Trinity-Colledge in Cambridge for his affection to his Majesty; and the latter, the Son of a Sequestred Minister, always educated in Principles of Loyalty, a good Scholar, and an honest Man; both recommended by Clarges to the General at his first going into Scotland, to be near his Person.

The King when he received the News from the Lord Mordant of the disappointment of the Design, went from Calais to Bullloign, and from thence by ealie Journeys, and very privately to Rouen. The Duke of York and Captain Titus stayed behind a while at Bulloign, and the parts adjacent, to be ready upon all occasions if any thing should intervene. His Majesty at Rouen was in Consultation which way to move, when Dr. Allestry came to him with the news of Sir George Booth's being in Arms, with Sir Thomas Middleton, and others, with great Forces in Lancashire, Cheshire and North-Wales, which put him in good hopes of Success. The first rumor of this Rising represented it very formidable, forasmuch as his Majesties Friends that lived at distance from it, were willing to receive it with the greatest advantage, so that the Numbers were believed to be much greater than they were, and by imagination advanced to what the willing Affections of the favourers of his Majesties Cause would have them. His Majesty sent the Marquess of Ormond to Paris to Transact some Affairs there, and went himself to St. Maloes by Caen, where he met the Earl of Bristol, and Mr. Oneale.

They at Westminster in the mean time were very active in dispatching Lambert on the Expedition against Booth, but first they issued forth a Proclamation to proclaim Major General Egerton, Colonel Robert Werden, Sir George Booth, Sir Thomas Middleton, and their Adherents, Traytors and Rebels, which was commanded to be proclaimed in all Market Towns, and read in all Churches.

Major General Maffey was very active in Gloucestershire, and if by an accident of the interception of a Letter his Design had not been ruin'd, he had certainly taken Gloucestershire.

Major General Maffey, the Lord Herbert, and others stir for the King in Gloucestershire.

and what with his own reputation in these Parts, and the assistance of the Lord Herbert of Worcester, Colonel Barron, Captain Glaynford, and others of the Kings Friends, they would have got together above three thousand Men, Miners and others, out of the Forest of Dean, and from about Stroud-Water, and other places. There was in Gloucester a Troop of the Army Horse under one Dale and a Militia-Troop commanded by one Crofts, who upon this Discovery caused three hundred Foot to be presently raised, and sent a Party of Horse to take the Lord Herbert, Massy, Barrow and Glaynford: They took the Lord Herbert, and brought him to Gloucester; Barrow and Glaynford defended themselves in Barrow's House, and upon Parol, to render themselves at Gloucester, were not taken. Massy and his Servant being taken Prisoners, Massy himself was set on a Horse, and a good stout Trooper set behind him, to hold him in his Arms, two rode on each side, and some Troopers before his Horse, and others behind: It was about the close of the Night, the Evening very dark and Tempestuous with Rain and Hail, insomuch that when they were going down a very steep Hill by Nimsfield-Road, about ten miles from Gloucester, the way to Bath, Massy's Horse, with the man that rode behind him fell headlong altogether, and tumbled down that steep Hill, whereby it hapned that the Fellow let go his hold, and most of the rest also; so that all the Prisoners, except the Lord Herbert, and Massy's Servant, escaped.

The Lord Herbert taken,

And Major Gen. Massy.

Massy escapes, together with several other prisoners.

Lambert marcheth against Sir George, and increaseth his Force.

Sir George Booth's Forces engaged with Lambert. Sir George defeated.

The Parliament sent to Dunkirk, for three Regiments to strengthen the Army; and Colonel Zanchy brought out of Ireland his Regiment of Horse, and Axtel's Regiment of Foot, which landing at Anglesey, marched to joyn with Lambert, who at his first march from London had not above 1500, but by Conjunction of several Troops and Companies that met him, increased to above 5000 before he engaged; Sir George Booth had not half the number, and those he had were without any Order or Discipline, because many of them being Noblemen and Gentlemen of Quality, were not without great Emulation, every one aspiring to Command, whilst no body obeyed. Sir George Booth having intelligence of Lambert's drawing near to him, thought to have got a days march before him into Lancashire, to have increased his numbers; and to gain time, he and Sir Thomas Middleton sent a Trumpeter with two Ministers, to shew the ground of their raising an Army, and desired a Treaty to save effusion of Blood: To which Lambert agreed, on condition they would first lay down their Arms, and surrender to him the Garrisons in their power. To this there was no reply; but some of Lambert's Men pressed so hard the next morning upon Booth, that at a Bridge near Northwich, a sharp Encounter was made between the Forces of each Party. The Boothians with much Courage defended the Pass, till they were overpowered by Numbers. Captain Morris, a gallant Loyal Gentleman was killed, and some few other of Booth's Party; of Lambert's very few fell, and those that did, of no great Note; all the vanquished dispersed themselves; Sir George Booth and Sir Thomas Middleton got away. The Lord Kilmurry, Brooks, Major General Egerton, Sir William Oneale and others were taken Prisoners, and all the Garrisons immediately submitted to Lambert.

Sir George, although he had the good Fortune at that time to escape, was not long free, being seized at Newport-Pannel in a Disguise, as he was riding towards London, in order to his Transportation into some Foreign Part.

Taken prisoner at Newport Pannel.

The Curious that made Remarques on this generous Undertaking, as commonly wiser in the Discourse than Execution of any great Design, did much censure the Conduct of it. They said, that they had many Opportunities to have ruined their Enemies, but omitted all; That Colonel Zanchy from Ireland, landing in Anglesey, might have been met, and with good probability of Success fought with, ere he could have joyned with Lambert, they being with all their Force betwixt him and them; and that Colonel Lilburn, who was gathering men together in Yorkshire, might easily, by any small Force from Lancashire have been broken, and hindred in his Levies; and that many other little Parties, which in small numbers came from several Parts might have been met and dispersed, before they united; and that one Blow given to any one of them, would have added so much to their Reputation, that it might have brought great Accessions to their Party. Others were of Opinion that nothing was more Destructive to His Majesty than these Plots and Contrivances of Rising for him; and that the best Resolution he could have taken, since the end of the first War, was to have sate in Expectation of some favourable Advantage to himself from the Devision of his Enemies; for what could new raised men do against experienced and successful Souldiers? And where the late King with all his strength could not prevail, Parties could less expect to conquer. But doubtless this was a great mistake; for it was nothing else, but the restless and invincible Spirit of the Royal Party, that by keeping the Usurpers in a perpetual distraction and Alarm, hinder'd them from proceeding to a final Establishment of their Power; and supported the very Life and Credit of the Cause. And certainly, the Generosity of those Noble Persons cannot be enough commended, since they valued no hazard, in respect of their Duty to their Sovereign, and the Vindication of the Laws and Liberty of their Countrey, and have left such an Example of Loyalty to their Posterity, as we hope will be maintained, as long as the Fame of their Vertues and Honour shall endure.

The management of this Rising censured by many.

General Monk preparing to have marched into England, and joyned with Sir George Booth.

General Monk in Scotland, was so much prevailed upon, by the report of Sir George Booth's prosperous Success in his Enterprize, and the Importunity of his Brother Nicholas Monk, that he resolved to march into England in pursuance of Booth's Declaration, which was very suitable to his own Inclinations.

He consulted in this Matter besides his Brother, only Major Ralph Knight, Major of his own Regiment of Horse, Captain Jeremiah Smith likewise of his own Regiment, Dr. Samuel Barrow Physician to the Army, Dr. John Price his Chaplain, and Dr. Thomas Gumble then Chaplain to the Council of Scotland, in regard he had many Seditious Officers in his Army, who were Spies upon all his Actings, and therefore was obliged to be very wary, and circumspect in his Proceedings; inasmuch, that when Colonel Atkins, a Royallist of his antient Acquaintance, came into Scotland to him, about the same Errand that his Brother did, Monk, (for fear of awakening the Jealousie of the Factious about him) durst not shew him any Countenance or Respect, but rather the contrary, sending him away somewhat discouraged: When all was ready for his March, and a Declaration to that end prepared, he demurred for two days, upon the stop of the English Packet, in expectation of Intelligence from his Agent Clarges, from whom he two days after received the fatal News of the Defeat of Sir George Booth.

Is diverted by the News of his Defeat.

The King receives News thereof at St. Maloes.

The King being still at St. Maloes in preparation of a Vessel to transport him into England, had the first notice of these Misfortunes from Mr. Brett, an English Benedictine Monk, which in a while after was confirmed to him by the Marquess of Ormond, who came to him from Paris, with Particulars of it: The King (always present to himself in the most difficult Accidents of his Life) discovered not much alteration at this, though it seemed a Cross that it might very well no less sensibly affect him, than whatever had yet hapned to him prosperous, and giving Check to his Fortune; because hereby all his hopes became desperate, of his being ever restored to his Subjects, without such Foreign Force as should be able to afford Assistance and Supply, to their Endeavours for him, by holding his Enemies so long in Play, till by accession of his Friends, they might be strong enough to resist their greatest Power and Force: yet even in this Reflection, he had many Doubts in his Mind, for that many late Successes of the English in Flanders, had made them seem invincible to those, from whom His Majesty was to expect Assistance. But since now nothing but Foreign Aid could visibly raise his hopes, he resolved seriously to apply himself to the Treaty now in Agitation upon the Borders between France and Spain, about a Peace betwixt those two Crowns, which was managed by Cardinal Mazarine, and Don Lewis D' Haro, the two chief Ministers of the two Kings, to which his Majesty had an Eye long since, not doubting but he should in some measure be comprehended in it, so as to receive Assistance from those Princes his Allies, as soon as they should be freed from their Embarrassments; and in prosecution hereof he had commanded Sir Henry Bennet, a person of great Prudence and Address, his Embassador Resident in Spain, not to fail to attend Don Lewis D' Haro to the Treaty, and to be present there to negotiate his Affairs. The Treaty being near Conclusion, his Majesty, for fear it should be ended before he came thither, made all possible haste to repair to those Parts; and in order thereunto, took his Journey forthwith from St. Maloes to Reims, where he met Sir George Carteret, and after some small stay with him, went from thence to Nants, and there his Company divided, till they met again at Toulouse; from thence he went by the Passage of Oleron, over the Pyrenean Hills, to Saragosa, the chief City in Aragon, and there he continued eight or nine days, and dispatched Mr. Oneale to Fontarabia, to inform himself of what passed at the Treaty; who, when he came thither, after some Conference with Bennet, they agreed to haste away Mr. William Dungan, an Irish Gentleman to the King, to let him know, the Treaty was prolonged, and that his Presence would very much quicken and advance his Affairs. His Majesty then immediately hastening by Post to the Treaty, continued incognito (as he had done all his Journey) till he came within three Leagues of Fontarabia, where he was attended by Bennet with Coaches to augment his Equipage; and from thence he resumed his State, and went in Publick.

His Majesty repairs thither himself,

He was met by the Baron of Batteville, a Person of great Honour and Civility (Governour of Fontarabia) with a Troop of Horse, a mile and a half without the Town; and when he came near it, all the Guns were discharged, and Don Lewis himself met him within the Gate. During his stay there, he was entertained in as splendid a manner as the time and place would handsomely admit. And during the Treaty, he had frequent Conferences with Don Lewis D' Haro, and was every day visited by him.

And is Honourably entertained by the Spaniards.

The Governing Power in England employed at the same time to attend on Cardinal Mazarine at this Treaty, and to promote their Concerns, Lockhart, who had continued ever since Oliver's Death, Extraordinary Embassador in France. The Cardinal lay at St. John de Luz, the nearest Town to Spain, on the French Borders, where he shewed so much Countenance and Respect to Lockhart, that the King thought it not decent to give him a Visit; but he received many from divers of the French Nobility.

Lockhart at the same time Agent at this Treaty for the English Commonwealth. Is countenanced and favoured by Cardinal Mazarine.

General Monk was inwardly very much troubled at these Disasters; and the more, because he found himself every day more and more incapable to remedy them: for the House displaced Colonel Daniel, the Governour of St. Johnstons, and many other Officers whom he much trusted, and were about to remove the rest: so that seeing which way things were likely to tend, and thinking it better to resign of his own accord, than to be worm'd out of his Command; or at least remain but like the Image of a General, and serve only for a Prop to other mens designs, he sent a Letter upon the third of September, to Lenthall the Speaker, to be communicated to the Parliament, to desire a Dismission from his Command; pretending, That he was infirm in his health, and had long continued in that remote Country; and therefore requesting, now that General Monk sends a Letter to the House, signifying his willingness to be dismissed from his Command.

that all Insurrections, which threatened disturbances to the Peace of the Nations, were allayed, he might be permitted to return into his own Countrey, to end his days in quiet.

The said Letter through Clarges his perswasion, is kept off by the Speaker from being read.

The Army begins to contrive the recovery and advancement of their Power.

Consultations among the Officers of the Army, promoted by Lambert, in dislike of some miscarriages of the Junto.

This Letter, though it was not sent to Clarges to be delivered, as usually all his Packets were, because he suspected he would have opposed that resolution of his, and been very backward and dilatory in the delivery of the Letter; yet Mr. Nicholas Monk giving him Intimation of it, the Matter was so ordered, that the Letter came to his hands, and by him delivered to the Speaker, with whom he dealt so effectually, that he agreed to delay the offering of it to be read for ten days, till a Packet came from Scotland to contradict it: Yet Clarges was put to great perplexity in this Business; for Vane, Salway, and those that affected not, or suspected the General (having private advice of this Letter) often call'd to have it read; and had not earnest and dextrous prevention been used to divert the House with other business, by some that loved the General well, and were prepared by Clarges, he had by this Despondency rendred himself incapable of doing that, for which he seemed by Providence especially chosen and markt out.

The Defeat of Sir George Booth and his Party, heightened much the Spirits of the Chief Officers of the Army, who began now to contrive how to restore the Military Power to its former Greatness, which was somewhat of late lessened by the Parliament, and in Designation to be wholly subjected to them. To effect this, there was a strict and private Correspondence held between some of the Officers at London, and Lambert; and those with him in Lancashire, Cheshire, and Parts adjacent. The Difficulty was, how to ingage the inferiour Officers (who were somewhat affected with their immediate Dependence on the House, by receiving Commissions from the Hands of the Speaker) to obviate this. It was advised to attempt nothing at the General-Council of Officers in London: but to begin with those of Lambert's Brigade, as most exalted by their late good Fortune; and therefore apter to be seduced by any plausible advantages of Power. These therefore were all conven'd to the number of Fifty, at Derby, the 16th of September, the first thing on which they began their Debate, was the Constitution of the Army; the Unity, Discipline, and Conduct whereof, they said was invaded by a Party of Neuters and Malignants: They complained of several Miscarriages in the Civil Administrations of Government, and of the Inactivity and Backwardness of Persons in Authority and Trust in the Counties, and the Defection of many Corporations, both which appeared in the time of the late Insurrection. They also seemed much to resent the Parliaments unwillingness to prosecute the Proposals of the Army at their first sitting, as an Expedient for Settlement, with many other things of like Concernment. These things were artificially insinuated into the Minds of the inferiour Officers who were easily enough drawn to an Opinion of their own Power, and to think themselves qualified to give Laws to all but themselves.

However, these Matters were at first only Treasured of in Generals, It being moved and agreed, that Colonel Zanchy, Colonel Michel, Major Creed, and some few others, should meet as Committees for the rest, to reduce them into Form, which was accordingly done. Lambert himself went privately to London, and Lieutenant-Colonel Duckenfield, a great creature of his, presently followed, to acquaint the General-Council of Officers with these Proceedings; and shortly after, the whole Matter being digested into the Form of a Petition, was sent up in a Letter inclosed to Colonel Ashfield, Colonel Cobbet, and Duckenfield; by whom, or any one, or more of them, it was to be delivered to Fleetwood, to be communicated to the General Council of Officers: and at the same time, when this was sent to London, an Officer was dispatched with a duplicate of it to General Monk, and a Letter with it to desire his Concurrence, and that the Officers of his Army might joyn with them: which Letter was subscribed by fourteen of the chief Officers employed under Lambert.

Sir Arthur Haslerig had secret Intimation of these Consultations at Derby; and the next day after the Petition came to London, which was on the 22d. of September, he moved the Parliament, at their first Sitting, against it, exclaiming with much earnestness against the Officers of the Army, who (he said) were attempting alterations in the Government, to the setting up a Single Person over them.

This put the House into a Jealousie of Lambert; to whom in their private Discourses, they attributed the whole Contrivance; and though he outwardly appeared passive in it, they said he aspired to succeed Cromwell: And because it was not yet time to effect his purpose, in his own Person, he would set up Fleetwood to be General of the Armies in England, Scotland and Ireland; and establish himself in the next Command to him, to be thereby able, with less envy, to compass his Ends. For Fleetwood, they said, was of an easie nature, and would be contented with the Name of General, allowing Lambert the power of it, till he should find a fair Occasion, to assume it in his own Right; and when he should have so gotten the Sword, he would not long want the Scepter.

Fleetwood confessed he had the Copy of a Petition, but seemed much perplexed at Haslerigs laying such an Imputation on the Officers of the Army, and endeavoured to justify their Innocence, as tending nothing less than what was alleadged; but all he said could not allay the heat raised by Haslerig, inasmuch, that they ordered, that Ashfield, Cobbet and Duckenfield, whom he affirmed to have the Original in their Hands, should that After-noon attend the House with it, and appointed Fleetwood to give them notice thereof, and to bring with him the Copy he had. Monk made no Progress in Scotland in this Affair, nor did he think fit to call together his Officers about it; but some of them that were Anabaptists attempted privately to get Subscriptions, till they heard of the severe Reflection that was made upon it by the House: Whom in the After-noon,

Their De-fires concluded to be drawn up into the Form of a Petition.

Haslerig vehemently opposeth the Ar-mies proceedings,

And possesseth the House against them. The Junto's Censure of Lambert, in reference to this Business.

Fleetwood endeavours to justify the Officers of the Army, but in vain.

At field, noon, the three Officers mentioned attended with their Petition: And because it was That, on which the chief Foundation was laid of that difference betwixt the Remnant Parliament and Army, which ended in the Dissolution of both, and was never yet Printed, We have thought it material enough to be here word for word inserted.

To the Supreme Authority of these Nations the Parliament of the Commonwealth of England, &c.

The Humble Petition and Proposals of the Officers under the Command of the Right Honourable the Lord
Lambert in the late Northern Expedition.

Humbly Sheweth,

The Tenour of the Armies Petition and Proposals.
That whereas we, with others who desire to fear the Lord in these Nations (though by our provocation we were ripe for destruction) have been again saved by the Lord, and have had a late view of his appearance as of old; in the beholding of whose gracious Footsteps, as we cannot but rejoice, so our selves tremble, lest the fruit of all (which the Lord may expect, and his People long earnestly for) become abortive now in the day of our deliverance: We therefore present unto your Honours Consideration these ensuing Proposals which we humbly lay before you:

1. That the Humble Petition and Address of the General Council of Officers at Wallingford-House to the Parliament, which was so unanimously and chearfully agreed to, and approved of, in a day of our greatest Confusions, may not be laid asleep, but may have fresh Life given unto it; It being upon farther and clearer grounds still upon our hearts, as the best and only Expedient yet offered (notwithstanding many Essays) to a happy and durable Settlement, being a fixed and firm Fence and Boundary (under God) for the securing the Civil and Spiritual Liberties which the Spirit of the Nation is unwearied in travel, not only to invade, but upon every opportunity (as We have often seen, and lately had a clear Evidence of) is ready to attempt the ruine and destruction of the same.

2. That whereas God having given a Spirit to the Army fixed and faithful to the Interest of his People, and Our Good Cause; when many who had been Friends, were either Apostates, Malignants, or Neuters, Joyning with the old Enemy, leaving the Parliament and Army, and their few active Friends singly to conflict with their late difficulties; And having now no such hopeful way like to prevail to ruine and frustrate what we have so long Contested for, as by working Divisions in the Army, making Breaches, begetting Mis-understandings, and dissolve its Unity, wherein, under God, its greatest strength lies: We do therefore, as the most effectual means for the maintaining the Discipline and Conduct thereof, and preserving its Unity inviolable, Humbly Propose, That his Excellency the Lord Fleetwood may be settled Commander in Chief of the Armies (his Commission expiring within a few Months;) that the Lord Lambert be the General Officer and Chief Commander of the Army next and under him; and also, that the Lord Desborow be the Chief Officer of the Horse under them: And that General Monk be the Chief Officer and Commander of the Infantry: They being all Persons under whose Conduct, Courage, and Fidelity, We have had eminent Success, Victory and Deliverance in the days of greatest Straights, and have been signally blessed and owned by the Lord; to Whom, and not to Man, be the Honour of all.

3. That having had very sad experience of a grand Apostatizing Spirit gone through the Nations, and amongst many of those who were intrusted for the Safety thereof, very few acting or appearing in several Counties for the preventing the Plots; and suppressing the Power of the Enemy in the late Rebellious Design, and many others not only flattering, but falling in with them, whereby a total ruine was threatned, and had been effected, had not the Lord in Mercy prevented: We therefore humbly Propose, That there may be a diligent enquiry in all parts, by faithful men employed to that purpose, what intrusted Persons have been guilty of any Contrivance, and acted against the Commonwealth Interest, and that they may be proceeded against accordingly. And likewise what Persons upon wicked purposes have been Neutral in such a distracted day, when their Assistance, according to their Employments and Trusts, would have been not less useful than seasonable; and that all such may be removed from their Places and Employments, Civil and Military; and that such, who on the contrary in this Juncture of the discomposed Affairs, declared their owning of this Interest, either in the County Troops, or Militia Volunteers, or otherwise, may be looked on as Friends, encouraged, satisfied their Arrears, protected from Injuries, countenanced by you, and as they are capacitated, invested with Authority in their several Countries.

4. That in the late Insurrections, some considerable Corporations, have not only aided, abetted and countenanced the Enemies Design, but have also made use of the Arms lodged with them, and themselves appeared in the Rebellion, willingly receiving the numerous accession of all engaged therein: Therefore We humbly Propose, That such Corporations may be discountenanced, and that You would be pleased to give Your Signal mark of disfavour against them; As also for the future, so to regulate Corporations, that such Persons well Qualified according to the Government of a well Constituted Commonwealth may be intrusted with Authority of Magistracy in every of the several Towns: That so the Footsteps of Monarchy may be rooted out.

5. We humbly offer, That all Persons whatsoever, Magistrates, Ministers or others, who have openly or secretly stirred up, or provoked the Inhabitants of these Nations to War and Commotions against the Parliament, and particularly to the late Insurrections, (of which is visibly apparent, many of them have not only been Abettors, but in their Persons appeared with Instruments and Weapons of War, as some of Us know) may be proceeded against, as You in your Judgment shall think fit.

After

The House signify their displeasure, and vote against the effect of the Petition. After the reading of this Paper, the House adjourned till the next Morning, and Ordered then to resume the Debate of it, and that no other business should intervene; And at their meeting, they Voted, That to have any more General Officers in the Army than are already settled by the Parliament, is needless, chargeable, and dangerous to the Commonwealth; and that Fleetwood shall acquaint them with this Resolve.

They had it under Consideration, to have imprisoned those that brought the Petition; but because the chief and most remarkable design of it tended to set up some new General Officers in the Army, they thought it enough to declare against it.

Fleetwood the next day, at a Meeting with many of the Leading Officers at his own House, informed them of the Parliaments displeasure signified in their late declarative Vote against the Petition and Proposals, and they thereupon resolved to decline the insisting thereon; but agreed, that some of their number should draw up somewhat in Writing of a more moderate nature, to be presented to the House, to profess an adherence to their Authority, in opposition to the King and his Party, (whom they styled the Common Enemy) and that they would stand by them in the Settlement of the Commonwealth against all disturbances whatsoever: And that this should be prepared and brought to be read and considered by a General Council of Officers to meet for that purpose the 27th of September, in the Chappel at Somer-set-House.

Another Petition brought into the Council of Officers more high than the former. And the said Petition was at the appointed time prepared and brought into the General Council by those to whom the care of framing it was committed, with a long Preamble, and many Proposals far different from what was expected by many that were then present; for there seemed at their former meeting, to be a general sense and opinion, that they should humble themselves for what they had before done without the permission and consent of their Masters, and make some Declaration of their intention, never to interpose more in matters of Government. But contrary to this, they arraigned them for what they had done against the Petition of Lambert's Brigade, and for what (they said) had been groundlessly and without cause alledged against them; and were so far from acknowledging their offences, thereby to recover the good opinion of the House towards them, that they justified their own proceedings with a kind of Reprehension of those that mis-informed the House concerning it. Colonel Okey, Colonel Hacker, Colonel Sanders, Major, Daberon, Major Barton and Major Breman, with many others, did much oppose the carrying on of this Representation, which retarded the Progress of it. And some of the dissenting Officers writ to General Monk, and sent him a Copy of what was brought in, with all the debates thereupon, desiring him to imploy his Credit with Fleetwood and Lambert to put a stop to it; as that which would, if not prevented, put an irreparable Breach betwixt the Parliament and the Army.

Monk was somewhat at a stand to know how to behave himself in this matter, but to avoid suspicion, he writ to Fleetwood a Courteous Letter of his opinion of the whole Affair, but insisted chiefly on that part of the Petition wherein it was proposed, That no Officer or Souldier should be cashier'd or dismiss'd from their Places, without a due Proceeding at a Court-Martial, or by his own consent, except in case of Reducement or Disbanding; desiring they would add (after the words Court-Martial) or by order of the Commander in Chief of the Army upon the place; alledging, That although the removing or displacing of Officers or Souldiers, otherwise than by Sentence of Court-Martial, was a thing rarely practised: yet if a General, or the Supreme Authority, should be understood to be restrained therein, it might encourage the more Inferiour Officers and Souldiers to affront the Superiour, and the General himself, and would in time make the Army a kind of separate Corporation from the Parliament.

This Letter came not to Fleetwood, till the greater part of the Officers had agreed to the Representation to be presented to the House. But Monk's intention was to make his advantage of this deviation, and to that end, sent his Brother Nicholas to London to Clarges, to Authorize him principally to acquaint such of the Members, as he thought most fit, That if they would assert their own Authority, he would march into England to justify it against any opposition.

During this Debate at London of the General Officers, all imaginable endeavours were used by the Dissenters, to protract and lengthen the time, but they were by much over-nimbred. And the Petition was Signed by 230 Commission-Officers of the Armies in England, Scotland and Ireland, who were then in and about London.

The Leading Members had from time to time Notice of the Progress of this Petition, and the matter of it, so that to prevent the Officers of the Army, even in the most reasonable of their Demands, They made many Orders concerning Pay of the Souldiers, and Mariners, and Provisions for the maimed Souldiers, and Orphans, and Widows of such as were killed in their Service. To the Souldiers they ordered, that all the Arrears, as well of those of the Army, as the Militia-Troops and Companies should be paid out of the Moiety of such Moneys as should be raised by the Sale, or other disposition of the Estates of Delinquents Sequestred, and to be Sequestred upon the late Insurrection, and out of one Moiety of Money to be raised by the Sale of Forests and Chaces, excepting New Forest, and the Forest of Deane. And excepting such Timber and Trees as should be thought fit to be reserved and made use of, for the use of the Commonwealth. And to the Officers and Mariners of the Navy, they ordered the other Moiety of the Money to be raised upon Delinquents Estates. And also that Hampton-Court-House, Parks, and Somer-set-House, (except the Chappel which was reserved for a French Congregation) and all other Mannors, Parks, Houses and Lands contained contained in the several Acts for Sale of the King and Queens Lands, should be sold, and the Money go to that use. And for the maimed Souldiers, Orphans and Widows, of such as were slain in their Service, they ordered the Committees formerly constituted for inspections into the Publick Treasuries, to pay two months pay to them, and to take care to put such of their Children to be Apprentices as were fit for it. They likewise to gain themselves the more general Esteem, considered of some way to satisfy part of the Debts contracted to raise Arms against the King, at the beginning of the War, upon the Publick Faith of the Parliament, which had been long neglected; and in order thereunto, they ordered, that the other Moiety of the Money to be raised by the Sale of the Forests (except as aforesaid) should be employed towards the payment and satisfaction of those Debts. The House imagined that these their Proceedings would so far satisfy the Generality of the Officers of the Army, as to divert them from the delivery of their Petition; and many of the most active Members in credit with the leading men did what they could to hinder it, but could not prevail. And upon the 5th of October, Colonel Desborow, with many others, came to the Door of the Parliament, and sent the Serjeant to inform the Speaker, that he, with some others of the Officers of the Army, attended with something to be presented to them, whereupon he was called in with those in his Company, and in the name of the rest spake these following words.

Desborows words at the delivery thereof.

"I Am Ordered by the General Council of the Army, with the rest of these Gentlemen, to wait upon you, to present unto you their Humble Representation and Petition; and they humbly desire you would accept it, as that which proceeds from the Hearts of those who desire nothing more than that the Lord would strengthen your Hearts, in carrying on that good Work of settling these Nations upon the Foundation of a Free Commonwealth, whereby the Religious and Civil Liberty of the good People thereof may be preserved and secured.

Having said this, he and those with him withdrew, and the Petition, being delivered by the Serjeant at Arms attending, into the Speakers Hands, was by his direction read. The Title was,

The Humble Representation and Petition of the Officers of the Army, to the Parliament of the Commonwealth of England.

the Armies humble Representation and Petition.

In the Preamble they set forth, "That having had by their Order some late Votes of Parliament Communicated unto them by Lieutenant General Fleetwood their Commander in Chief, occasioned by a Debate in Parliament upon the Petition and Proposals of the Officers under the Command of the Lord Lambert in the late Northern Expedition; they have enquired diligently into their Hearts and Ways with reference thereunto, and finding nothing amongst them but Faithfulness and Integrity to the Parliament and Commonwealth, they are sensible that there have not wanted some Persons who have endeavoured to beget mis-understanding betwixt the Parliament and the Army, and to that end have represented their Actions and Intentions so, as it is taken for granted, that there hath been irregularity amongst them, at which they fear they have taken offence, whereas if there had not been an Anticipation, they are persuaded it would have appeared to all unprejudiced Spirits, that neither they (who for the generality of them were ignorant. (for so they pretended) of that whereat the offence was taken, nor their Faithful Brethren of the Northern Brigade, who signed the said Petition and Proposals, did design or intend any thing tending to the interruption of the Parliament, the prejudice of the Peace of the Commonwealth, or any other bye or sinister respect, not becoming the Trust reposed in them. Wherefore being sensible of the Evils that Persons abroad may make from the least apprehensions of Difference betwixt the Parliament and the Army; and that they may, as much as in them lies, remove all occasions of surmise, justify their own Innocency before them, and frustrate the expectations of any, who by blowing up the Coals of Dissention, hope to warm themselves thereby; They have thought it their Duty to present their naked Thoughts to them, hoping they will find so much of Integrity and approved Faithfulness in them, for the welfare of the Commonwealth, as may continue a firm Confidence of them, and engage their Zeal against all such as shall go about to reproach their Faithful Army, or any Member thereof for the future, especially considering that the Peace of these Nations depends much upon a Cordial and Affectionate Union of the Parliament and Army, and an uninterrupted good understanding of each other.

It could not rationally be believed, that these men could think this their manner of Proceeding suitable to the temper of Subjects to their Superiours, or that it could tend to any thing but that which they seemed to avoid; namely, a Breach betwixt their Parliament and them. But a clearer manifestation of this was apparent in their Proposals annexed to this Preamble, ushered in with Four bold Declaratory Assertions; of all which we shall insert the words themselves as they were presented. Where they say,

We do humbly and plainly declare,

1. That notwithstanding what any persons may suggest or say to the contrary, We are not for, nor suggest, nor intend, nor will we suffer, any such Proceedings, as shall tend to the setting up of any Single Person, or persons, as whatsoever in Supreme Authority: And for a demonstration hereof, We may appeal to your own Judgments, upon our late Actions, wherein since our Declaration of the sixth of May last, We have with all Industry and Faithfulness endeavoured to render our selves serviceable to you and the Commonwealth, and have chearfully observed your Commands, some of Us with our Lives in our hands in your late Service; wherein to our great encouragement the Lord hath once more appeared to own you and your Army, and the Good Old Cause, for which we have contended. And at the late Return of this Parliament to the Discharge of their remaining Trust, We did with simplicity and plainness in our Humble Petition and Address presented to you, manifest our Hearts and Desires, and that with much unanimity and fulness of consent which we apprehended was well accepted by you.

2. That we have not since changed our Principles, leading to a well-regulated Commonwealth, wherein the Liberties of the People thereof both Spiritual and Civil may be fully secured, and Persons of known Integrity, Piety and Ability employed in Places of Trust and Concernment; but resolve by the Assistance of God to remain constant to them: And make it our humble Prayer to God, that he would incline your Hearts effectually to prosecute the same, and make you Instrumental in bringing forth such a Foundation of Government, whereby all the Good People of these Nations may rationally expect that such Liberties and Rights shall be preserved to them and their Posterities. And we can truly say, that it is in our Hearts earnestly to desire, that God would Crown you with the Honour of making these Nations happy by such a Settlement as may not be liable to every Change of Governours, to have the Peace thereof disturbed by introducing new Governments.

3. Whereas a Petition and Proposals were lately drawn up by the Officers of the Brigade, that (under the Command of Major General Lambert) hazarded themselves in your Service with good success, whereby through the Blessing of God upon them, and others of your faithful Friends and Servants, the Peace of this Commonwealth is still continued: And the said Petition was sent up to some Officers here, to be presented to the Lord Fleetwood; which hath been by some interpreted to evil and sinister Ends, and from thence suggestions derived, as if there were intentions to violate the Parliament, to set up a Single Person, or another General: In order thereunto, We do sincerely profess, (whatever the design of any Persons may be to promote such Causeless Jealousies) We have had no other than Faithfulness and Candor in our Hearts and Actions towards the Parliament; nor do we apprehend (with submission we may speak it) any reason or cause of offence to be conceived against your faithful Servants, who lately gave so ample proof of their Fidelity and Courage.

4. We cannot but esteem our selves unhappy, to have been so mis-represented to the Parliament, as should occasion such a publick Admonition upon Record; and considering what evil use may be made of these things by a Publick Enemy, and to the end they may be disappointed of their hopes, and all such Persons discouraged as shall go about for the future to promote Jealousies, or by mis-information to beget Divisions betwixt the Parliament and their Faithful Servants the Army: And that a good understanding may be preserved between them; We humbly pray,

1. That the Officers of the Army, and particularly those who have reason to bear the marks of Your Favour for their Faithfulness in the late Northern Expedition, may stand right in Your Opinion, and have your Countenance.

2. That whatsoever person or persons shall for the future Groundlessly and Causelessly inform the House against your Servants, thereby creating Jealousies, and casting scandalous Imputations upon them, may be brought to Examination, Justice and condign Punishment.

3. That it being an undoubted Right of the People to have a Liberty in a peaceable and submissive way, to Petition the Supreme Authority, which Liberty hath been by your selves asserted, allowed and approved of; We cannot but also assert the said Liberty, and humbly Conceive, that your Faithful Servants of the Army have no way forfeited their Rights as Free-men, and that therefore they hope it will be no offence for them to submit their humble Desires to the Parliament.

4. That You would be pleased to take into Your serious Consideration, the necessitous Condition of the poor Souldiers of your Armies, and that all possible care may be taken for their timely supply, their Wants being such as earnestly call for it: And that some speedy and effectual course may be taken to provide for the Maimed Souldiers, and the poor Widows and Orphans of such as have been slain in Your Service, that the blessing of God may be upon you.

5. That such who have freely offered themselves in the several Counties and Cities of these Nations, to own and stand by you and your Cause in the late Insurrections, with the hazard of all which is dear unto them, may have your Encouragement, and be employed in Places of Trust and Command.

6. That it being a thing granted by all, that without due Execution of Martial Discipline, the Peace, Union and good Government of an Army cannot be preserved; the Discipline of the Army may be preserved inviolable, and in particular, that no Officer or Souldier of the Army may be Cashiered or Dismissed from their Places without a due proceeding at a Court-Martial, or by his own Consent, except in cases of Reducement or Disbanding.

7. That it being judged necessary by the Parliament, for the keeping of the Army under such a Conduct as may render the same serviceable to the Commonwealth, to appoint a Committee of Nominations, for the proposing of Officers to the Parliament for their Approbation; We humbly pray, That no Officers may be brought into the Army, but such as shall first come under the Consideration of the said Committee, and be by them presented.

8. The Office of the Commander in Chief of the Army being of so great Concernment to the Peace of this Commonwealth, and his Commission at present (as we conceive) expiring within a few Months, We humbly pray, that the Consideration of that matter may come before you, and some such effectual course be taken therein, as may prevent our fears, and the hazard of leaving the Army to Confusion.

9. And that you would retain a good Opinion of your Army, and against all discouragements whatsoever soever, proceed in the carrying on of that good Work intrusted in your Hands, for the Glory of God, and advantage of these Nations. In the prosecution whereof, through the help of our God, We shall be found (notwithstanding all endeavours to the contrary) faithful to You and this Commonwealth.

The Junta dissemble at first their distaste at these Proceedings of the Army.

The Insolency of these Proposals, gave our present Senators reason to suspect their Authority to be of no long continuance; but in regard many Officers of the Army dissented from the Representing and Proposing Party, they imagined the rest would not be very hasty to make a Rupture: Therefore they resolved to assert their Power at any hazard; in order whereunto, they had many sharp Debates, about this Representation and Petition; but in the end they concluded with moderation, and directed their Speaker to call the Petitioners into the House, and acquaint them, "That the Parliament had read their Representation and Petition, and taking notice of the good Expressions therein of their Affections and Faithfulness to this Parliament and Commonwealth, had Commanded him to give them the Thanks of their House for them; and to let them know, that they had already taken into consideration the Relief of the Poor Widows, Orphans, and maimed Souldiers, to whom Pensions had been formerly allowed; and had also settled a way for satisfaction of the Arrears due to the Officers and Souldiers, and would endeavour to bring the same to speedy effect.

The Council of Officers labour to get Subscriptions to their Representation.

Desborow gives an Account of this Answer to a General Council of Officers who assembled that Afternoon on purpose. It was not unknown to them, that the House resented their Address, and that in such a degree, that it was evident they intended to alter the Constitution of the Army. To provide against this, they thought fit to strengthen their Party, by getting more Subscriptions to their Representation and Petition, and immediately they agreed upon the Form of a Letter to be sent to Ireland, and another to Scotland, and to every Regiment in England; for the Signing and Dispersing of which, they nominated from among themselves a select number in the Nature of a Committee. That to General Monk, was in these Words:

Right Honourable,

A Letter from a Committee of the Council of Officers to General Monk concerning the Armies Representation.

"WE do by Command from the General Council of the Officers of the Army now in London, transmit the inclosed to you, being a true Copy of the Representation and Petition, which was this day by them humbly presented to the Parliament; and the Votes of the House passed thereupon: And are further to signify as their Desire; that the same may be communicated to all the Commission-Officers of that part of the Army under your Command, and the Subscriptions of all taken to the Representation and Petition, that are free to Sign the same; which being so Signed, it is desired you will be pleased to cause them to be close sealed up,

"and returned to Thomas Sandford Esquire, Secretary to his Excellency the Lord Fleetwood, who is to give an Account thereof. As we have thus fulfilled the General Councils Pleasure, we are well assured you will be pleased to comply with their Request; which is all at present from

Your humble Servants,

J. Lambert, Rich. Creed, John Desborow, John Mason, William Packer.

The General had intimation of this Letter, from Clarges before it came to his hands, with a full Narrative of the Occurrences that passed upon the delivery of the Representation; which made him resolve to admit of no Subscriptions in Scotland. And when the Letter came to his hands, He returned in Answer to it; That he thought it unfit to have any Subscriptions made to that, to which now the Parliament had given an Answer, lest it should be understood to make a Party against them. And in pursuance of this Resolution, he sent Orders to all the Regiments under his Command, to forbid them to subscribe.

The Substance of General Monk's Answer.

The House a little before this Agitation, had begun to Court General Monk very much, as thinking it a matter of no small importance, to gain him wholly to them. And he having sent a Letter to them, (which they received two days after the delivery of the the Representation of the Army) to acquaint them with the peaceable condition of Scotland in obedience to their Government, wherein he moved something in favour of some of his Officers, and commended the temper of his Army: They returned him answer the same day with the thanks of the House, and let him know, The high esteem they had of the Services which with so much Valour, Prudence and Faithfulness he had performed; and that they had granted the desire of his Letters, with assurance to him and his Officers and Souldiers under his Command, of returns of Favour from the Parliament answerable to their merit

He is courted by the Parliament party.

And complemented by a Letter with gratulatory expressions for his good Service.

Upon the tenth of the said Month, they took the Proposals in the Armies Representation into Debate:

To the First they Answer,

"That the Officers of the Army have received, and shall from time to time receive marks of the Favour of the Parliament, and countenance answerable to their Merit and Faithfulness.

To the Second they Answer,

"That it is the Duty of all Persons, especially the Members of Parliament, to inform the House of any thing, which in their apprehension may concern the publick Safety; And it is the undoubted Right of the Parliament to receive, and debate those Informations, and to resolve what they think fit thereupon.

The House takes into Debate and answers, one by one, the Armies Proposals.

To the Third they Declare,

"That every Member of the Army, as Freemen of England, have right of Petitioning the Parliament: but withal, think fit to let them know, That the Petitioners ought to be very careful both in the manner, and in the matter which they desire; That the way of promoting and presenting the same may be peaceable; and the things Petitioned for not tending to the disturbance of the Commonwealth, nor to the dishonour of the Parliament: And that it is the Duty of Petitioners to submit their Desires to the Parliament, and to acquiesce in the Judgment thereof.

In Answer to the Fourth Proposal,

"They Order Two months Pay to be forthwith paid to the Officers and Souldiers of the Army in England, out of the Six months Assessment of Five and Thirty thousand Pounds a month now due; And that the Council of State do give Order, that the same be paid accordingly; And that Two months Pay be also issued to the Officers and Souldiers in Scotland and Ireland. To that part of the Proposal, To provide for the maimed Souldiers, and the poor Widows and Orphans of such as had been slain in their Service, They refer the former Votes made in their behalfs.

To the Fifth Proposal they Answer,

"That such Persons as have been Faithful and Active for the Parliament in the late Insurrection, the Parliament will take care to give them all due encouragement as occasion shall be offered.

This Resolute Proceedure of the Members at Westminster, filled the Army with strange Rumours: And they in the mean time to provide against all Accidents, consulted, If any Breach should be made upon their Government, how to leave them that did it as destitute as might be of Means and Authority to maintain themselves in such Actings. And since nothing could more weaken them in such Confusion than want of Money, They for a time deferred their further Consideration on the Proposals of the Representation, and made an Act against the raising of Money upon the People without Consent of Parliament; wherein they enacted,

An Act of the Remnant against raising of Money without Consent of Parliament.

That all Orders, Ordinances and Acts, made by any Single Person and his Council, or by both or either of them, or otherwise, or by any Assembly or Convention pretending to have Authority of Parliament, from and after the Nineteenth day of April, 1653. and before the Seventh of May, 1659. and which have not been or should not be Enacted, Allowed and Confirmed by this present Parliament, should be declared, deemed, taken and adjudged to be of no force or effect from and after the said Seventh day of May, 1659. And that no Person or Persons shall after the Eleventh day of October, 1659. Assess, Levy, Collect, Gather, or Receive any Custome, Impost, Excise, Assessment, Contribution, Tax, Tallage, or any Sum or Sums of Money, or other Imposition whatsoever, of this Commonwealth, without their Consent in Parliament, or as by Law might have been done before the Third of November, 1640. And that every person offending contrary to this Act, should be adjudged to be guilty of High Treason, and forfeit and suffer as in case of Treason.

That which chiefly provoked them to the hasty making of this Law, was a Letter which had been communicated to them, under the Hands of Lambert, Desborow, Berry, Kelsey, Ashfield, Cobbet, Packer, Barrow and Creed, directed to Colonel Okey. It was much to the same purport with that sent to General Monk before mentioned, and in the same Form: This Letter was by accident delivered to Okey; for there being many Letters signed, to be sent to the several Regiments, which were left to be disposed of by Fleetwood's Secretary, he, amongst others, directed one to Okey; who, as soon as he had it, shewed it to Sir Arthur Haslerig, and he to the House; who looked upon the Contents thereof, to be such as tended to the fomenting of the Army against them; but respite the Consideration of it till the next morning, which was the twelfth of October.

That Night Mr. Nicholas Monk arrived (after Mr. Monk not above four days Journey from Scotland, and had Orders from the General to tell Clarges, That he was resolved, if the Parliament would be resolute in asserting their own Authority against the Army, he would assist them in it, and if required thereunto, march into England in their Defence.

Clarges, early the next morning, communicated this to Walton, Haslerig and Scot, who were so much encouraged by it, that at the first sitting of the House, they moved, that the Doors might be shut, that none of their Members might go out; and then after a long and brisk Debate, they Ordered that the Commissions of Lambert, Desborow, Berry, Kelsey, Ashfield, Cobbet, Packer, and Barrow, who subscribed the said Letter should be void.

They had it in motion, to declare at the same time, that the next immediate Officers to them should have their Commands conferred on them, but delayed that till the next day, yet ordered the Names of those Officers to be brought to them, and before they parted, they made an Act, appointing Commissioners for the Government of the Army; wherein they first repealed and made void the ACT, Constituting Charles Fleetwood, Lieutenant-General, and Commander in Chief of the Forces raised, and to be raised by Authority of Parliament, within England and Scotland, and all Power and Authority thereby given; And that all the Armies for the future should be governed by Commissioners; in the place and stead of a Lieutenant-General. These Commissioners were, Fleetwood, Monk, Ludlow, Haslerig, Morley, Walton and Overton, who were impowered to execute all and singular the Powers and Authorities, incident or belonging to the Office of Lieutenant-General, from the 11th of October, 1659. to the 22d of February, 1659, &c.

Lambert removed from his Regiment, and the Officers under him successively advanced.

Col. Morley and Moss ordered with their Regiments to Guard the House. Lambert, with the Reg. that adhere, stops the Passages to the Par. House. The Speaker forced to return.

Lambert and his Party dissolve the Remnant Parl. by hindring the Members from coming in to the House. A Council of Ten Army Officers appointed to be Managers of the State-Affairs pro tempore.

They likewise Ordered the Serjeant at Arms to carry the Orders for Discharge of the said Officers Commissions, to the respective Persons whom it concerned: And because Lambert was the most considerable Person, and the next Officers to him were men they knew, and in whom they confided, they immediately ordered Camfield, his Lieutenant-Colonel, to have the Command of his Regiment; and that Skepper the Major should be advanced to be Lieutenant-Colonel, and Captain Bradshaw to be Major of the Regiment. Three of these, lately Constituted Commissioners for the Government of the Army, met at Night, in the Speakers Chamber at Westminster, and Ordered Colonel Morley's and Colonel Moss's Regiments, as a guard to the Parliament, who possessed themselves of the Palace-Yard, and the Great Hall: Lambert on the other side, seeing what was like to become of him, if Matters were driven on at that rate, as they were begun against him, thought best to play his Game, while it was in his power to prevent; and to that end drew some Regiments together, who marched to Kings-Street, and possessed themselves of all Avenues to the Parliament.

In the morning the Speaker came with his Coach towards the House; but at the Entry into the Palace-Yard, he was stopt by Lieutenant-Colonel Duckenfield; and after a little Expostulation was forced to return. The Souldiers on both sides kept their Station till towards the Evening in a posture of Hostility, ready to have fired one against the other, only expecting when the Word would be given for Onset; so that it was verily thought the Business would have come to a sharp Conflict between them: but they were better advised, insomuch that the Council of State meeting at White-Hall, and ordering all of them to draw off to their Quarters, both Parties agreed thereunto, and marched away that Night: However, Lamberts Party obtained their Desire, forasmuch as none of the Members were permitted that Day to assemble; and for the future, Fleetwood took care always to keep good Guards at the Door of the Parliament-House, to prevent them from Meeting. The next Day divers of the chief Officers of the Army met at White-Hall, and chose Ten Persons as a Council, for carrying on the Affairs and Government of the Commonwealth, till further Order. These were Fleetwood, Lambert, Whitlock, Sir Henry Vane, Desborow, Sir James Harrington, Major Salway, Berry, Sydenham, and Archibald Johnson a Scotchman, commonly called the Laird of Warreston; And at Wallingford-House, the same Day, the General Council of Officers agreed, That Fleetwood should be Commander in Chief over all the Armies; that Lambert should be the next Chief Officer under him; and Desborow Commissary General of the Horse; and that all the Officers to be constituted in the Army, should be nominated by Sir Henry Vane, Fleetwood, Lambert, Desborow, Ludlow and Berry; but in especial manner they took care for the preparing of Articles of War, for the good Government and Discipline of the Army, as that which would be most necessary for their Consistence. In this they were very industrious; and in all the time since the first modelling of their Armies, their Discipline was so exact, that the Carriage of their Souldiery was very tolerable to the People, and that made their Enormities, in reference to the Government, less obnoxious to Vulgar Censure. Some mentioned General Monk to be considered in their Distribution of Offices, but were not hearkned to; and those that opposed it, assured the rest, that he had little power over the Officers of his Army; and if he disagreed to their Counsels, he might easily be displaced: They had not yet received his Resolution concerning the Subscriptions about which they writ, to be made by his Officers to their Representation and Petition, and therefore were ignorant of his Dissent from their Actions: So that in Confidence of his Concurrence, they dispatched Colonel Cobbet to him, with a large Narrative of the Reasons of their Proceedings.

The prevailing Party of the Army no great Favourers of Gen. Monk.

The Lord Mordant, and some others of the Kings Friends lying at Callais, immediately upon the News of these Disorders in England, dispatched Mr. Nicholas Armorer to his Majesty, who was then at Fontarabia, industriously soliciting for Supplies of Men and Money, of which he had large promises from the Spaniards, and for the defraying the Expences of his Journey, he received from Don Lewis D' Haro a Present of Twenty Thousand Crowns: His Majesty had once a purpose to have gone directly to Madrid; but upon the Advice brought to him by Mr. Armorer, in hopes that something might fall out in England to his Advantage, he chose to return to Brussels. The Earl of St. Albans coming up to the Borders to the King, just upon the Dissolution of the Treaty, met his Majesty at Bayon, in his Return from Fontarabia; Cardinal Mazarine being before departed from St. John de Luz, not having received any Visit from his Majesty before his departure.

Mr. Armorer sent by the Lord Mordant to the King at Fontarabia to inform him how matters went in England. The King returns from Fontarabia towards Brussels meeting the Earl of St. Albans by the way.

The Earl of St. Albans conferred much with the King whilst he staid with him, which was not long, and then he went to Paris, whither the King followed him incognito by easie journeys; and after some stay there, went from thence to Brussels.

At this time such of the Kings Friends as had opportunity were very active in his Service, amongst whom the endeavours of Mr. Evelin of Says-Court near Deptford in Kent, is not to be omitted, who having some acquaintance with Colonel Herbert Morley, one of the five Commissioners for the Command of the Army, whose Birth, Education and Interest in his Country rendered him unlikely to be cordially inclined to prostitute himself to the ruine of his Country; he attempted with just and honest Arguments to draw him to the Royal Party, to which he believed he might be very useful, as having a greater credit than any of his Party in Suffex, where he lived, in case his Majesty should Land there, and having also also a good Influence upon the Fleet, and two of the Army Regiments.

Morley, after some Hesitation, was perswaded by Mr. Evelyn to return to his Allegiance, and he desired him to intercede with the King for a Pardon to himself and some few others of his Relations, (which he named) and then departed into his Country, and gave him notice how to correspond further with him.

The Council of Officers consult about a Frame of Government.

The Council of Officers had frequent Meetings at White-Hall, and a Junctio of the wisest of them were in deep Consultation, how to make such a Frame of Government as should be durable and lasting against all Attempts whatsoever. They found most of the Gentry in England to be some way or other involved in the late Endeavours for the King, and were advising of a way to seize all their Estates, and divide them amongst their own Party; whereby the Riches of the Nation, the most powerful of all Interests, would be absolutely changed into the Hands of Persons irreconcilable to Monarchy. This was such Advice, as if it had succeeded, might have proved fatal, and laid a Foundation to Slavery, never to have been subverted.

A certain number of Persons called to take upon them the Government, under the Title of a Committee of Safety. Their Instructions.

The General Council, on the twenty sixth of this Month, nominated twenty three Persons to be intrusted with the Management of Publick Affairs, whom they called a Committee of Safety; and the next day they invited them to sit, and gave them Powers and Instructions; of which the chief were,

1. To execute all the Powers of the late Council of State, together with Authority to call all Delinquents to Account, that were in the late Insurrection, and to proceed to a bringing them to Justice, and to give Indemnity to all Persons that had acted for the Service of the Common-wealth, since the Year, 1649.
2. To oppose and suppress all Rebellions and Insurrections.
3. To treat with Foreign States and Princes.
4. To raise the Militia in the several Counties.
5. To dispose of all Places of Trust that are void, and to remove such as are Scandalous.
6. To make Sale and Compositions for all Delinquents Estates.

Their Names.

The Names of these Governours were, Bulstrode Whitlock, lately made Keeper of their Great Seal, Fleetwood, Lambert, Desborow, Steel Chancelour of Ireland, Sir Henry Vane, Ludlow, Sydenham, Salway, Walter Strickland, Berry, Lawrence, Sir James Harrington, the Laird of Warreston, Alderman Ireton, Tichborn, Hewson, Clark, Bennet, Colonel Lilborn, Cornelius Holland, Henry Brandriff, and Robert Thompson.

They likewise published a Declaration, in the Close whereof they Declare; That

The substance of their Declaration.

'They think themselves obliged, for preventing the manifold Evils and Inconveniences which must necessarily fall upon the other Good People of the Nation, as well as themselves, by reason of the several Orders, Acts, pretended Acts, or other Declarations,

'or any of them, Enacted, made or past on Monday the tenth of this Instant October, and on Tuesday and Wednesday then next following, to declare them, and every of them null and void to all intents and purposes: and likewise all Acts, Orders and Proceedings thereupon had or done in as full and ample manner, as if the said Orders, pretended Acts or Declarations, and every of them, had never been: all which they publish and declare, that all Persons concerned may take notice thereof, and no Person whatsoever suffer any further prejudice thereby, hoping that all peaceable, well-minded, and unprejudiced persons will acquiesce in the necessity and Justice thereof.

'They further Declare to the World, that it is upon their Hearts, and they earnestly desire, and shall endeavour, that a due Liberty may be assured to all the Free-Born People of these Nations, both as Men and Christians; That a full and through Reformation of the Law may be effected; as also, that a Faithful, Godly, and Painful Gospel-Preaching-Ministry may be encouraged and provided for, by some certain Way that may be less troublesome to them, and less vexatious to the People, than that of Tythes. And further, that they have no Aim or Ends to set up a Military or Arbitrary Government over the Commonwealth: But have already provided, that the Civil and Executive part of Government shall be lodged in a Committee of Safety; and they obliged in a short time, to prepare such a Form of Government, as may best suit and comport with a Free-State and Commonwealth, without a Single Person, Kingship or House of Peers: and that they shall to the utmost of their Endeavours labour to obtain those desirable things so often declared for; and to maintain and preserve the Peace of these Nations in their several Stations and Places; and shall hope, that God for his own Glory, and the good of his own People, will give a blessed end of these Troubles, by a happy Settlement upon the Principles formerly declared for; and which have been, and still are, so earnestly breathed after, by all those that truly fear his Name.

And then to Cajole the Godly Party (as they called them) they proceeded to tell them;

'They doubt not but such being truly sensible of the many Temptations besetting them on every hand, the great Difficulties they laboured under (and know not what further Straights a Day may bring forth) will say on their behalfs, Who are sufficient for these Things? And out of former Experiences being taught, That the Lord is a present Help in time of Trouble, will cry aloud for them before the Throne of Grace, That the LORD himself may appear, and carry on his own Work in their Hands: And if it shall please him by his Spirit, to stir up those that fear his Name to be instant on their behalf, they shall not fear what evil Man can do unto them. These

The Exorbitancy of their Actions somewhat restrained by the mixture of some moderate men among them.

These unreasonable Men, impatient of all Government, thought by these Insinuations, to silence all Gainfayers, and to make the People believe, they could frame any Government, and not be obliged to submit to it. Their Confidence was great, and their frequent Invasion of several Constitutions so successful, that they thought they were not by any to be opposed, in the most extravagant of their Actings; yet in this Design of theirs, they had the better grounded hope, in regard Vane, Whitlock, and Salway, and some others of the most prudent of their Party, assisted in their Councils.

Whitlock indeed, was much censured for his Conjunction with them; but some wise men, that marked this Demeanour, and the Moderation he used, did believe, that if he had not in a great measure restrained the Exorbitancy of their Intentions, they had in the short time of their Tyranny, done much mischief to many of the King's Friends.

The substance of General Monk's Letters to Fleetwood and Lambert.

That which put the greatest Check to their Career, and gave some Life to the fainting Hopes of all good men, was the Arrival of Letters from General Monk in Scotland, to Fleetwood and Lambert; which came to them the twenty eighth of October, in the Evening. He complained therein, Of their Violation of Faith to the Parliament; and declared his Resolution, to endeavour to restore them to their Power, against all Opposition whatsoever.

Clarges dispatched away into Scotland by the Grandees of the Army, together with Col. Talbot, to solicit Monk to a Treaty.

Fleetwood, Lambert and Desborow immediately met at White-Hall in much Confusion; and about twelve at Night they sent Major Haynes to desire Clarges to come to them; who when he came, after some question of his knowledge of the Generals Proceedings (to which he made very wary Answers) they desired him to go into Scotland with Colonel Talbot, (whose Regiment was then at Edinburgh) to prevail with Monk for a Treaty of Mediation, to prevent the effusion of Blood. They said, they chose Talbot to accompany him, because he was very grateful to the General.

Clarges was very glad of this opportunity to get away, (for he feared to be much worse Treated,) and they were so pressing for his Departure, that they allowed him but three hours preparation for his Journey.

Monk well inform'd of all passages in England.

In the mean time, Monk in Scotland had by an express from Clarges, which came to him the 17th of October, received exact Information of the Interruption of the Parliament; and at several times before, he had notice of all the Proceedings introductory to it, which made him expect no less, and therefore gave him time to prepare for what hapned.

What Forces he had, and how dispersed.

He had in Scotland at this time ten Regiments of Foot compleat, each consisting of a Thousand Souldiers, besides Officers; except four Companies which had been drawn into England a little before upon the Alarm of Sir George Booth's Rising; his Numbers of Horse were but small, having had two Regiments of them likewise removed upon the same occasion: so that there remained with him but two Regiments of Horse, viz. his own, and Colonel Philip Twisleton's, and one Regiment of Dragoons, Commanded by Major General Morgan: The Foot were dispersed at great distances, Eight Companies of his own Regiment lay at Edinburgh, and two of them at Dalkeith, where his Residence usually was: All Colonel Talbot's Regiment was quartered in Edinburgh; Nine Companies of Col. Wilks his Regiment were in the Cittadel at Leith, and one of them in the Castle at Edinburgh; Nine Companies of Colonel Read's Regiment were at Sterlin, and the Tenth in England; Eight Companies of Colonel Overton's Regiment at Dundee, and two of them in England; Colonel Daniel's Regiment lay at St. Johnstons; Colonel Savvies Regiment at Aire; Colonel Cobbet's at Glasgow; Nine Companies of Colonel Fairfax's Regiment at Aberdeen, and the other in England; and part of Colonel Smith's Regiment at Inverness; and the rest of the Garrisons in the High-lands: The Horse and Dragoons lay in several places near the Foot-Quarters; but at such distances, as might not incommode the Country.

The late Commissioners of Nomination, whilst they sat at White-Hall, had much changed the Officers in all the Regiments both of Horse and Foot, which raised great Discontents amongst them: They had given Colonel Daniel's Regiment to Pierston his Lieutenant Colonel, an Anabaptist; They had also displaced Hubblethorn, who was Major to Colonel Talbot's Regiment; Hughes, who was Major to Wilkes, they had reduced to be but Captain, and preferred one Knolles an Anabaptist to his Command; Johnson the Eldest Captain in his own Regiment of Horse, they put out, (and many more too long to mention) in all the Regiments; few or none of those New Officers chosen at White-Hall, to supply the places of those removed, were yet come into Scotland: So that General Monk taking that Opportunity to retain all the displaced Officers in their respective Commands, made them, who had been thus disoblighd before, thereby intirely depend on him.

Monk keeps in those Officers whom the Commissioners had displaced.

Having resolved to stand upon his Guard, and Declare against the Army in England, the first thing he did, was to Consult which way was best to secure these Regiments, and the several Garrisons with least hazard; and knowing that in Actions of great Concernment, there was more use of Execution than Counsel, he made very little hesitation in what he intended to Act: He was most diffident of his own Regiment of Foot, (which during his Absence in the Dutch War had been so transformed, that most of the Officers were become Anabaptists) and the three Regiments in Glasgow, Aire and St. Johnstons.

And removes those whom he himself distrusted.

The first minute that he had Notice of the Disorders at Westminster, which was on the before-mentioned 17th day of October, he sent Captain Jeremiah Smith of his own Regiment of Horse, to Edinburgh and Leith, to signify his Pleasure to Major Hubblethorn, Major Hughes, and Captain Johnson, to have them come to him to Dalkeith: The first was Major to Talbot's Regiment of Foot; the other, to that of Wilks's, quartered at Leith; and Johnson command-commanded a Troop in his own Regiment of Horse.

The General signifies his Resolution to several of his Officers, to march into England, to reestablish the Parliament, and hath their consent and encouragement.

These came immediately upon Summons to the General, and there they met Captain Morgan of his own Regiment of Foot, and Miller of Wilks his Regiment, who had the Guards of Dalkeith House: The Lieutenant-Colonel, and Major of the Generals Regiment, were both Anabaptists, and at that time absent; Lieutenant-Colonel Cloeberry of Read's Regiment, was by chance there, and was advised with. The General communicated his Intelligence to them, and his Resolution to march into England with a part of his Army, to re-establish the Parliament; To which they all freely consented: Hubblethorn gave him perfect assurance of all Talbot's Regiment of which he had now the Command; because the Colonel, and Pounel the Lieutenant-Colonel were both in England: And indeed much must be attributed to the Courage and diligence of that Gentleman, whose Regiment was by him intirely, both Officers and Souldiers, made at the General's Devotion; which being then quartered at Edinburgh, gave a great Reputation to the whole undertaking: For although some in all the Regiments, and many in most, were ready upon the Confidence they had in the Generals Courage and Conduct, and were well inclined towards him; yet they were all apter to follow in any Design (as most naturally are) than to begin the Action: Captain Johnson had been by the Nominators at London removed from his Troop, but was now by the General restored to it; and as he was Eldest Captain of the Regiment, by the absence of Great preparations in Monk's Army, for the fortifying themselves against the prevailing Faction in England.

Major Knight, he had the Command under the General of all his Regiment of Horse, and was well beloved by them: Major Hughes gave him hopes of making all Colonel Wilks his Regiment at his Service: Hubblethorn (whom he made Lieutenant-Colonel of the Regiment) was Ordered to draw it early the next Morning into the High-Street at Edinburgh, and to let all the Musketeers have Matches lighted, with Powder and Bullet; and Johnson was Commanded to be ready in Edinburgh at the same time, with his own Troop; and that of one Captain Symnel's, an honest stout Officer: Hughes was appointed in the absence of his Colonel, and Lieutenant-Colonel, who were sent for the next morning to confer with the General, to secure the Cittadel at Leith: He had upon some kind of expectation of Change, kept Captain Witter (of the Regiment lying at St. Johnstons) and Captain Robson (of the Regiment at Aire) both at Edinburgh, and had sent for them to him; and upon Conference with them, they both undertook, one to secure the Cittadel at St. Johnstons, and the other at Aire; which were very difficult service to perform, in regard that most of the Officers in those Regiments were very ill-disposed towards the General: Little more was done that Night, but the sending an Express to Major Knight, who was then in York-shire at his own House, to hasten him to his Command.

The next day after Dinner the General marched to Edinburgh, with only Captain Smith's Troop of Horse, having before dispatched away Witter and Robson. Morgan had been sent before to Edinburgh, to draw up his Regiment, but had Orders to give them neither Match, Powder nor Ball: As soon as he came into the High-Street, and found the Regiments in that Order he expected, he retired a little into his Quarters, to model his own Regiment, and sent for Morgan to him, whom he immediately made Lieutenant-Colonel; Captain Nicholas he promoted to be Major, and at the same instant displaced all whom he knew to be disaffected to him, and such of them as were dangerous he imprisoned: which done, he marched with both the Regiments to the Gray-Friars Church, where he called together the Officers, and told them, That the Army in England had broken up the Parliament out of a restless uncontrollable disposition of being pleased with nothing that tended to the welfare and happiness of the People; that though they had lately taken shame to themselves (in their publick Declaration) for their former Apostacies, yet now, finding the Parliament unapt to humour them in all their Extravagancies, they were weary of them: He said he was resolved to make the Military Power subservient to the Civil, and that since they had their Protection and Entertainment from the Parliament, it was their Duty to serve and obey them against all opposition; which should be his Practice, and he expected their Concurrence and Assistance to joyn with him. But if any were dissatisfied, and would declare it to him, they should have free Liberty, without Reflection, to leave the Service, and have Passes to go home.

The General marches to Edinburgh, and there orders all things to his best advantage.

His speech to his Officers.

Upon this, Colonel Wilkes and his Lieutenant-Colonel with all that were present, unanimously declared to live and die with him; Captain Johnson was then dispatched to Barwick, to secure that Garrison, which was then under the Command of Lieutenant Colonel Mayers; and he did it very effectually, and it was a Service of great Advantage to Monk's Designs; Captain Hatt, and Captain Dennis, two well approved Officers of Colonel Cobbet's Regiment, being both at Edinburgh when these transactions were, and having received private Orders to model that Regiment then quartered at Glascom, and to march with it to Edinburgh, came thither before any knowledge of the alterations at the Head-Quarters, and privately consulted with such of the Regiment as they were confident of before they publicly discovered their Orders. Lieutenant-Colonel Young, who was there in chief, in the absence of the Colonel and Major, did as much as he could to oppose it; but he being presently secured, Hatt and Dennis performed their Instructions, and immediately marched the Regiment to the General.

Captain Witter, as soon as he came to St. Johnstons, drew up two Companies, whom he most confided in, upon the Sands before the Cittadel, and proposed to them what he had in charge from the General; whereupon they all shouted in consent to it, at the noise whereof the Souldiers coming in confusion out of the Cittadel, he marched with the afore said Companies panies into it, and took possession thereof; He made Lieutenant-Colonel Keine, and Major Kelk Prisoners; the first whereof was afterwards upon his consent to joyn with the General, releas'd from his Imprisonment, but Kelk was still detained. Of this Regiment at St. Johnston, Witter, for his handsome performance of this undertaking, is by the General advanced to be Major.

And is made Major of the Regiment.

Robson gets possession of the Cittadel at Ayre, and is made Colonel of the Regiment.

Robson at Ayre was more deliberate in the execution of his Orders; he dealt so with the Officers, that most of them except the Colonel and Lieutenant-Colonel, agreed to comply with the General. The Lieutenant-Colonel privately got away to Carlisle, and secured that Garrison for the Army in England; the Colonel temporiz'd a while, but finding his Arts succesful; and thereupon flying away into England, the General gave the Command of the Regiment to Robson, for his good Service; and sent into England for Colonel Daniel, who had been a little before displaced, (and Pierston his Lieutenant-Colonel advanced to the Command of that Regiment) to take again his Command of Colonel thereof.

The settlement of these two Regiments gave much encouragement to the General, in reference to the carrying on of his design; and the rather, in regard he himself had look'd upon it as none of the easiest works to compass.

He made no alteration at first in those Companies which belonged to Colonel Overton at Dundee, because he had hopes to gain him to declare for him with the Garrison at Hull, then under his Command; and in regard they were on that side of the River Tay, they could not have done much if they had oppos'd. He sent to Colonel Fairfax, who quartered with his Regiment at Aberdeen, to haste with it to Edinburgh, and Lieutenant-Colonel Cloeberry was sent to Read, his Colonel at Sterlin, to appoint him to march to the General with all his men except two Companies, which were to be left for the safety of the Town and Castle. And at the same time, he sent a Commission to Inverness to Colonel Man, to be Colonel of that Regiment, in the place of Smith, (who adhered to the Army in England) and appointed him to send three of his best Companies to Edinburgh. He dispatch'd also some trusty Officers to the Horse Troops, and then went himself to Leith, to settle the Cittadel and Regiment in obedience to him; upon his first coming, he displaced Knolles, and confined him, and restored Hughes to be again Major to the Regiment, and likewise some other Anabaptist Officers were put out, and others placed in their rooms; Capt. Clifton, who with a Company of this Regiment from Leith, had the Command of Edinburgh Castle, upon promise of faithfulness and Service to the General, was by him continued in his Command with Trust and Confidence. And thus these three Regiments of Foot at Leith and Edinburgh, were in one Afternoon pretty well settled till more time could be allowed to refine them.

Smith's Regiment at Inverness given to Colonel Man. The General marched to Leith, to settle the Cittadel, and Regiment there.

And thence to Linlithgow.

Upon the 21st. he marched some Companies of Horse and Foot to Linlithgow, intending to go thence to Glasgow, to settle Cobbet's Regiment, of which he was in some doubt; but he there received intelligence of what was done by Hatt and Dennis, and therefore went no further.

He there also had notice of the submission of the Cittadel at Ayre, and that Barwick was rendered to him, where Colonel Cobbet was stay'd and detained in Prison, as he was coming into Scotland with his Regiment, and it was seasonably done; for if he had been permitted to pass, the opinion which was had of him by the Soldiers, might have much hindred the General's proceedings. He was brought with a Guard to Edinburgh Castle, and kept there, the General being much incens'd against him, upon private advice that he had instructions to have seized him, if he had not agreed to the Armies Actions in England. At Linlithgow at a Council of Officers, it was advis'd that some way should be used to draw off the Independent Churches in England, from favouring the English Army, which would have much weakened that Party; if it had succeeded, for most of the inferiour Officers were of that persuasion; for the effecting of this, a Declaration was fram'd, agreed to, and published and disperf'd all over England: And at the same time, another Declaration was also made to satisfy the Kingdom in general, with the reason of his taking Arms, alledging that he did it for the vindication of the Rights and Liberties of the People, and the freedom of Parliaments.

Col. Cobbet detain'd prisoner at Barwick.

Two Declarations published by the General, in vindication of these proceedings of his.

Two Expostulatory Letters were also writ, the one to Fleetwood, and the other to Lambert, blaming the violence of their Proceedings against the Parliament, and another to the Speaker, to be informed of the Condition wherein the House then was; declaring therein, that whereas there ought to be a right understanding between the Parliament and the Army, he would be ready, in case the Army persisted to disobey their Orders, to assist them with the Forces under his Command, according to his Duty.

By this time, Major Knight was returned out of England: for hearing of the disorders at London, and that some jealousies had been entertained of him, upon an Information that he had been some months before engaged with the Lord Castleton in Sir George Booth's Rising, he thought best for his own security, to make all possible haste down to his Command; his Arrival fell out to be three days after the General had first declared; Morgan's Regiment of Dragoons, was made a Regiment of Horse; and Major Farmer was sent with a Troop to secure Carlisle, who when he came thither, did not march into it with Confidence, as Johnson did into Barwick; but sent in to treat with the Governor, and was so long doing it, till Elton that Commanded the Town, had fixed the Soldiers to a Resolution of keeping him out. Moreover, Monk considering that his Army could not be got together in six weeks time, to march into England, he therefore to amuse the Faction there, sent Major Knight with four Troops of choice Horse, and six Companies of Foot, to surprize Newcastle. were Commanded by Knight, Johnson, Wilmot, and Simnel, and the Foot by Miller, Mansfield, Collins, Winter, Seymour and Belcham, all Gallant and well resolved men. But being come as far as Morpeth, he had advice, that some Forces were got into Newcastle before him, which being intimated also to the General, he presently countermanded him and his party to Anwick, where he staid for some time; the not-taking Newcastle, was no discouragement to the General or his Army; for upon more deliberate consideration he thought the miss of it rather fortunate, than prejudicial to him, since if he had taken it, it would in all probability have been immediately besieged by Lambert. And then he must have been obliged to attempt the relief of it, and fought before he could have been well enough prepared for it, and thereby have hazarded his whole design.

The General at the same time that he sent the before-mentioned Letters to London, did likewise send a Messenger with Letters to Lieutenant General Ludlow, who Commanded the Army in Ireland, to move him to joyn with him, or at least to represent to him so fair an account of his Action, as might induce him not to be his hinderance in any of his Undertakings.

Colonel Lilburn, who lay at York with some Forces, upon the first Rumour of Monk's Declaration, drew what Forces together he could, and without staying to be well informed of the Reasons of Fleetwood and Lambert's breaking up the Parliament; He drew all the Officers in those parts to enter into an Association against Monk, and to joyn with the Army at London, in whatsoever they designed.

He also writ to Mr. Clarke, the General's Secretary, who was an active useful Instrument in his affairs, to seduce him from his Service; the truth is, the greatest part of Clarke's Estate was in England, and he was a man of so civil and ingenious a conversation, that he might have been the better excused in a Neutrality to both Parties, and his Interest did direct him to it. But he was resolved to hazard all his Fortunes in the General's bottom, and would not by threats or cunning, (which were both used by Lilburn to him) be prevailed with to quit his Party. For which his Fidelity and Constancy at this time, he was ever after so much esteemed by the General, that he trusted him with his most secret transactions.

Morgan.

Major General Morgan had lain long sick of the Gout at York, and began about this time to recover his health. The Letter which Monk sent to him was intercepted by Lilburn, which Morgan little resented, but thought it advisable so far to conceal his passion (till he might have convenient opportunity to get into Scotland) as to seem to Lilburn rather to dislike than approve of the General's proceedings.

Talbot and Clarges arrive at E- denburgh, and are well received by the General.

Colonel Talbot and Clarges came not to Edenburgh till the second of November; they were both very well received by Monk, but especially Clarges, being his Brother-in-law, with whom he had that night much Conference in private. The General wondred that Fleetwood and Lambert would send him, and thought it a good Omen to his success, that he had him to assist his designs. Clarges frankly asked him what was the true end he aimed at in this Enterprize; telling him, that it was impossible for him to be ever trusted after this Rupture if he patched up a Peace with the English Army, and withal acquainting him that he observed a great Consternation in the Officers and Souldiers as he passed, and that he believed many of them would fall off to him.

The General (as the most reserved man then living) was in some trouble to be pressed to discover his Intentions, and at that time opened himself no further than to let him know he was resolved to endeavour to free his Native Country from the slavery it was under, and to effect it, he thought it one of the best Expedients would be to restore the Parliament; but in their Admission to sit (if it were by his Arms) he would make no difference betwixt them, but let in as well the Secluded Members as others. Having said this, he conjured Clarges to secrete, being very sensible that the jealousy had on him by the Army was so great, (it having been often cast in his dish, by some of his ill-willers, that the King was in the bottom of his Designs) that all he could contrive, would be little enough to beget a Confidence, even in his own Party to engage with him.

As to the present Condition of his Affairs, he acquainted him that he had about Seventy thousand pounds in money, part whereof was already in his Treasury, and the rest would in a short time be paid into it. And that all his Magazines were very well stored with Ammunition, Arms, and all other necessaries, and that he had in part modelled his Army fit for his purposes, and should in a while perfect it. Clarges let him know, that the wants in Fleetwood and Lambert's Army were very great, and that upon Lambert's Expedition they were not able to advance one month's Pay for his Army, which would make them by free-Quarter be very burthenome and distastful to the Country. So that if by a Treaty, or any other means he could protract time, his business might be done without hazard. The General replied, That he thought the Overture of a Treaty from Fleetwood and Lambert might be improved to his great advantage, for he could not in a months time draw his men together. And that his sending Knight with a Party to lodge at Anwick, was to make them think him in greater readiness than he was, the more thereby to distract their Levies. The General then resolved upon a Treaty, and the next Morning summoned his Chief Officers together, to nominate Commissioners, and to resolve upon Instructions for them, he chose to advise with his Officers in all these matters to free them from Suspicion. Colonel Talbot was very glad his Journey was so successful to obtain a Treaty so easily. The General and his Officers met, and at the first Proposition they consented to the motion for a Treaty, and when he put them to name fit Persons to be Commissioners, they referred it to him.

He

Mr. Knight He then appointed Major Knight, and Lieutenant Colonel Clocherry to be two, and put it to them to name a third, and they proposed Colonel Wilks, who was reputed to be a good Religious man, and acceptable to Fleetwood, and the Officers in England. They then came to consider of Instructions, and were so hot in debate, that the question was not without much contest carried for allowing them a fortnights time for the Treaty. The General was perplexed in his mind at this; for he would not have them limited to time, because that was the only thing he wanted, yet he discovered no displeasure: however, in the rest of the Instructions, he so invented matter to confound their Debates, that they had no power given them to conclude any thing; and they were to insist on the restoring the Parliament: But if the Members should refuse to sit, then to debate of some other Form of Government. They were likewise to provide for an Act of Indemnity for all Acts done since the first of October, and to take care that the Arrears of such part of the English Assessment as was appropriated to the Pay of the Army in Scotland, should be forthwith paid; and that a Godly, Learned and Faithful Ministry, with competent maintenance, and other encouragements, should be continued in the Three Nations; the like regard being had to Schools and Universities, with many other matters sufficiently remote from the present Affair. Moreover, it was particularly inserted, That they should provide, that the Acts of the Army in England, should not be deemed the Acts of a General Council of the Army, without the Concurrence of the Officers of the Armies of Scotland and Ireland.

These Commissioners were hasted away, and Lambert was so far advanced with his Army, as to meet them at York, where he told them he had full Power from Fleetwood, the Officers of the Army, and the Committee of Safety, to treat and conclude with them of all differences. They seemed not averse to it, but when they began to enter upon the matter, and proposed the Restitution of the Parliament, he told them, Fleetwood and the Officers at London had agreed with him and his Officers not to conclude of any thing concerning that matter, without the common consent of all, and so they went forwards towards London. Nevertheless, as a thing previous to the Treaty, it was by both Parties accorded, that the Forces of neither should advance from their Quarters, and that there should be a free uninterrupted intercourse of Letters during the Treaty.

The Army of Horse and Foot with Lambert did amount to near twelve Thousand, and Monk had not above half the Number; nevertheless he had this advantage, that he paid all his Men, and the other did not. The way he had for providing Money, was very accidental: The late Parliament (so called) about the latter end of June (as is before expressed) had made a short Act to authorize the payment of a years Tax upon England, Scotland and Ireland, appointed to be raised by one of Cromwell's Parliaments: and they in that Act directed One Moiety of Money to be paid the First of August, and the other the tenth of October following. The Proportion for Scotland to pay of this Tax was Six Thousand pounds a Month; and in regard the Country was poor, and burthened with many other payments, the General writ to all the Commissioners of Shires, and indulged them so far as to grant them forbearance of payment till the tenth of October for the first Moiety, and two Months after for the rest, which they readily undertook to do, and performed it for the most part: And this he had represented so effectually by Clarges his Agent to the Parliament, that he got twenty thousand pounds in Money to be sent into Scotland towards the pay of his Army, till that money could be collected. And that was the bulk of all the Money he had in this undertaking; but it was increased by Excise and Customs, and other Duties; for after he declared, he seized on all. And of this we make the more particular mention in this place, because some, ignorant of these Transactions, have published, That the General had an Assessment raised for him at a Convention of the Nobility of Scotland; which was first invented by the Seditious in England to his prejudice, and afterwards, because uncontradicted, believed for a Truth.

Lambert was informed by his confident Lilburn, that Major General Morgan (who had been some time sick of the Gout in York) was dissenting from General Monk's Proceedings, and that he would be willing to go to him to dissuade him from the pursuit of them; and therefore he dealt with him to take a journey thither (on pretence of repairing to his Charge, which was then in Scotland) to use the credit he had with him to an Accommodation betwixt them: Morgan (who waited only for an occasion to get away) was glad of this Overture, and undertook to do his part in this business, so that at a days warning he began his Journey from York towards Edinburgh. He had with him one Troutbeck a Chirurgeon (upon pretence of taking care of his health) a very subtle Intelligent Person, excellent in his Profession, and withal of great Discretion, and much beloved by the Souldiers of both Armies, and of considerable Interest among them. These got safe to Edinburgh about the seventh or eighth of November; and the coming of Morgan was a good Accession to Monk's Party, and a great encouragement to all the Officers and Souldiers: For he was esteemed by them to be next the General, a Person of the best Conduct of any then in Arms in the Three Nations, having been near Forty years a Souldier, and present in the greatest Battels and Sieges of Christendom for a great part of that time; and particularly in Flanders, where he Commanded a Brigade of Foot, he acquitted him self to the astonishment of his Enemies, and the admiration of Marshal Turenne, and all the French Commanders in that Service with him. At his first coming to the General, he asked him aloud merrily, If he would lay down his Arms, and be Friends with Fleetwood and Lambert? To which he was answered by him, If they would restore the Parliament, he had little more to say, and if he pleased, he might let them them know as much. Morgan replied, I promised to ask you the Question, but not to return to them that sent me, if you denied it: I am very glad I am here with you to assist you, and follow your Fortunes in all your undertakings; You know I am no Statesman; I am sure you are a lover of your Country, and therefore I will joyn with you in all your Actions, and submit to your Prudence and Judgment in the Conduct of them.

This generous Friendship was kindly received by Monk, and it was the more valuable, in that it was done in a time when the Army in England was at its greatest height; and that in Scotland very inconsiderable in respect of the other, and not yet well settled; for a day or two before, one of the Troops of Morgan's own Regiment ran over Tweed to Lambert.

He privately delivers a Letter to the General from Mr. Bowles a Minister of York.

The effect of the Letter.

Clarges sent to Fairfax, Rossiter, and others to engage them to General Monk.

Col. Talbot prevailed upon by Lambert to take part with him.

In the evening Morgan was private with the General, and delivered him a Letter which he brought from Mr. Bowles a Minister of York, a very eminent Man of those parts, and of great Credit with my Lord Fairfax, and many others of good Note in that County, (Clarges being yet at Edinburgh, and consulted with in the business.) The Letter imported, That the Lord Fairfax, and many others of good Interest in Yorkshire, were willing to joyn with the General, but that they disapproved of his Declaration which was restrained to the Restoring of that Part of the Parliament only which sat after the Seclusion of the rest; and was filled with many Protestations for the asserting of no other than a Commonwealth Government. To this the General answered, That Clarges could witness his Intentions in those Particulars, That what was printed in his name, was not (at that Conjunction) to be regarded as the Result of his own Reason, because his Writings were drawn by other hands; and till his Affairs had a firmer Consistency, and he more Power in his hands, it was unseasonable for him to contradict what was done; since all that was writ could scarce prevail with the Army to believe he had not a design to set up the King in his Government. The Conclusion of this was to send Clarges to Fairfax, Rossiter, and several others to engage them; it being thought expedient at the same time, to imploy all possible care to amuse the Parliament and Army, till the General could get a power in his hands to justify other Counsels. Clarges was dispatched to Bowles, with a Letter of Credit to him, to cause a belief in him of what he should acquaint him with, on the part of the General, and another Letter to the same purpose to my Lord Fairfax, from whom he was to have an Address to Rossiter in Lincolnshire.

Talbot knew nothing of these Traverses, but carried himself with much moderation all the time of his stay, and with so much profession of respect to the General; That he assured him, If he would go to London and be a Neuter, he would preserve his Regiment for him: Which he promised to do, but was afterwards by the importunity of Lambert, prevailed upon to act contrary to that Engagement, and (some think) to his own Inclinations; for he was esteemed by all that knew him to be a Person not averse to a better and more just Government than he at that time lived under, and was obliging to all the Gentry where he lived, that needed his assistance and help.

Fleetwood could not conceal his fears; for the same Week that Talbot and Clarges were sent to endeavour a Reconciliation, before he had any return from them, Captain Dean, one of the Treasurers, and not long after, Mr. Caryll the Minister, with Colonel Goffe and Whaley, were sent to the General on the same Errand: Likewise Mr. Hammond and Mr. Barker were deputed in the name of the Independant Congregations in and about London, to mediate a Peace betwixt the two Armies.

Mean while, Clarges and Talbot took their leaves of the General to return home. The pretence of Dean's coming into Scotland before Caryll and Whaley, was to look after his Charge; for he was one of the Treasurers at War; but he privately dispersed Tickets as he travelled, to seduce Monk's Souldiers from him, bringing him withall a Letter from Fleetwood, which contained an Offer of what Command in the Army he should desire, upon the least private intimation of his inclining to take part with him. This made the General to believe there were some jealousies betwixt Lambert and him; which he might have improved to the breaking of one of them; but he chose the more generous way, and refused the Offer; letting him know, He sought not himself, but the good of the Nations, and when that was obtained, he would rather lay the Command he had, down, than seek to enlarge it.

Lieutenant-Colonel Barret came at the same time from Ireland with a Letter from Sir Hardress Waller, John Jones, and the ruling people of that Country, (for Ludlow was then in England) declaring their Refusal to joyn with the General; letting him know by their said Letter, bearing date the fourth of November;

That at a General Meeting of the Officers of the Irish Army, they Unanimously resolved not to approve of the Resolution he had taken, which tended (as they alledged) to the Engaging of part of the Armies of these Nations against their Brethren, or the dividing of them in Interest or Affection; being well assured that such a Practice would be found in the Issue to be nothing else but the opening of a door for the Common Enemy to come in, (whatever Umbrage should be put upon it) and destroy those very Persons and Authority, on whose behalf their Affections inclined them to undergo very great difficulties. Adding, That they held it a Duty incumbent on them towards him (as their honourable Friend of whom they had a very high esteem) in the behalf of all the People of the Lord in these three Nations, to bear their Witness against any such Resolution or Practice, and to improve their utmost endeavours to prevent the same.

The General was not at all discouraged at this return to his Civil Letters and Declaration sent thither, having at the same time received Advice from Cornet Monk, by another hand, That Sir Charles Coot, Sir Theophilus Jones, and a very considerable part of the Army were resolved to Assist him; That Sir Hardress Waller himself might in time be drawn drawn to joyn with them, and that he doubted not in a short while to receive good effects of their endeavours.

Dean and Barret sent back into England with a check. But in the mean time, upon notice that Dean and Barret were active to withdraw the affections of the Souldiers from their Duties, they were thereupon sent away from Scotland with a severe Rebuke; the General being unwilling to punish them by Imprisonment or any severer course, because they came to him on publick Business.

Cap. Guillim endeavours to betray two Companies of the Generals men, but is found out. These Men did much mischief amongst the Souldiers, who were many of them by their inveiglements seduced; two Troops of Trisleton's Regiment of Horse, commanded by Ashley and Dean, refused to joyn with the General, and thirty three of them were dismounted, disarmed and cashiered, and Foot-Souldiers put on their Horses; but forty of Dean's Troop with their Colours ran into England; and two Companies of Foot of the Regiment which came from St. Johnston's, being quartered at Dunbar, had like to have been betrayed to Newcastle by one Captain Guillim, who had been lately of that Regiment, and was discharged; This Guillim procuring leave to go into England, came to Dunbar, where he made the Souldiers believe that he was by the General restored to his Command, and had order to secure Captain Thompson, who then Commanded them, and to carry them in Boats to Berwick; some of the Sergeants so far gave Credit to him, that they placed a Guard upon Thompson, whilst he in the mean time was hiring Boats to carry them, and was so earnest in it, that he would have taken any, though never so leaky, for their Conveyance: This put the Men into some jealousy, inasmuch, that they desired to see his Orders, whereupon he leaped upon his Horse, and ran away.

The General takes care to reform his Regiments. At Sterlin, a Troop of Colonel Sanders's Regiment were in the like Disorder, and about thirty of the Men dismounted, and others put in their places. This obliged the General to be more circumspect in the reforming his Regiments; so that he discharged all the Officers whom he any way suspected, and sent them into England. In Colonel Fairfax's Regiment eighteen Officers were displaced; and in most of the rest some were put out, in all, to the number of seven score Persons: Those Regiments wherein least alteration was made, were Talbot's and Read's; the first, through the diligence of Hubblethorn, who a while after deservingly, upon Talbot's joyning with Lambert, had the Regiment conferred upon him; and the latter, by the Care and good Example of the Colonel, who was a Person that always loved and esteemed the General.

Clarges excuses Major Gen. Morgan to Lambert. Lambert was much troubled when he heard that Morgan had deserted him, and when Talbot and Clarges came to York, he complained of it as a kind of Breach of Faith, but was quickly by Clarges better satisfied: for he assured him, he heard him move General Monk to a Peace with him; but being Major-General of that Army, he could not refuse to do his Duty, in staying there where his charge was, since the Difference between the two Armies was not yet come to that degree, to make it beyond hopes of Reconciliation; and that he might rather further the same by his Presence, than Absence.

Clarges, as hath been already mentioned, had received a Letter to the Lord Fairfax, from the General, and some Instructions to Roffiter, and several others; about which he was secretly to confer with Bowles the Minister at York, to whom also he brought a Letter of Credit, for what he should propose to him; Bowles, with whom he had much Discourse, desired to be fully informed of the Generals Intentions, and was by Clarges so well satisfied in them, that he undertook to negotiate with the Lord Fairfax, Colonel Bethel, and several others in Monk's behalf; and for Evidence of it, he advised him to stay privately in York till he went to confer with the Lord Fairfax at his House at Nun-Appleton, six miles from thence, (that he might know what Advice to send into Scotland) which he accordingly did. And at his return, acquainted him, That Fairfax would rise by the midst of January, and he might be confident Bethel and Smithson would joyn with him, who were men of good Interest, and well-beloved of the Souldiery in Lambert's Army: On the other side, Bowles pressed to know what expectations the General had from other places, and was by Clarges informed, that Colonel Whetham at Portsmouth was a great Friend to the General, and he doubted not, but he would take the first Opportunity he could to declare with that Garrison for him, which he liked very well; for Whetham was a moderate Man. He told him likewise, that Colonel Hacker with his Regiment would raise some men in Notttinghamshire and Leicestershire, and Colonel Hutchinson, and Sir Arthur Haslerig would joyn with them; and that Okey was labouring to make Disturbances in London amongst the Regiments there. Bowles at first was not well pleased that he should make use of these Aids: but when he was acquainted by Clarges with the Reasons which induced him to it, he was satisfied.

The first thing the General design'd, was to break Lambert's Forces, to make himself Master of all the Armies; and to effect this, it was requisite to refuse no help, since the major part of the whole would be such as he could make use of to model the rest, to any purpose he should imploy them in. Then they found out a secret Messenger to send with intimation of this Conference to Monk; and Clarges went towards Lincolnshire to pursue his Negotiations; but about Doncaster he had so grievous a fall from his Horse, as he was riding Post, that his Life was despaired of; but after a little stay there, he was brought to a Village betwixt Tuxford and Newark, where he was forced to stay ten days ere he was able to travel; nevertheless, in the mean time he sent Expresses several ways, and by the means of one Bristow, a Confident of Colonel Roffiter's, he had opportunity to send to him, and had his Answer; which was, That he would joyn with Fairfax, and do what he should direct. When he came to Leicestershire, he heard nothing of Haslerig, but that he had, in despair of doing any any thing, retired to Woodstock; and the Reason he gave for it, was, That if he should raise Forces in his County, it might give occasion to the Kings Party to Arm, and thereby hazard the whole Cause; and that therefore it would be better to close with the Army in all their Exorbitances, than venture with so much danger to oppose it.

Clarges was somewhat troubled at this Discouragement, but omitted not to proceed in his Endeavours; and thereupon sent to many of the Council of State, who were retired, to draw them privately to London, to assist with their Counsels, in promoting the Restauration of the Parliament; which he did upon observation amongst the Souldiers of Lambert's Army, that they favoured much the Declaration of Monk, for restoring that Authority, and were only diverted from joyning with him against Lambert, upon a Jealousie of the Kings being in the bottom of his Design; which was often insinuated by the Council of Officers at London, in their publick and private Debates: So that in the immaturity of that time, nothing could more advance Monk's purpose of subduing the English Army, than to beget a Confidence in them of his adherence to his Declaration.

This Practice prevailed so far, as to get the Council of State together in London, where they had many private Meetings: but in the meantime, the Commissioners for the Independent Churches, which were sent into Scotland, were solicitous to divert Monk from the prosecution of the War; and so far the Business proceeded, that there was a Conference appointed with them at Haly-rood-House, where were present to treat with them, General Monk, Colonel Fairfax, Colonel Syler, Doctor Barrow, the Judge Advocate of the Army, and Mr. Gumble one of the Generals Chaplains.

At this Conference, Mr. Collins an Independent Minister (who had been one of the Preachers of the late Council in Scotland) was admitted to be present as a Neuter.

Mr. Caryl was the first that spoke, who in a long and studied Speech declared, That the Commissioners had desired him to speak for them; That they all came, not do deliver their own Sense of the Generals Proceedings, but the Sense of the Churches, (for so upon every occasion he called the Independent Congregations) That the Churches had not given them Commission to enter into the Merits of the Cause, nor to Debate whether Lambert's Action of turning out the Parliament were justifiable or not; but only to present it to his Lordship as their Opinion; That though that Action could not be justified, yet his Lordship had not a Call to appear against it, in that manner he then did; That his Lordship had only in Charge to keep Scotland in quiet, and was not bound to take notice of any Differences that should happen in England. (Nor indeed could it reasonably be expected of him, he being in a place where he could not be supposed to have such true and timely Information, as was necessary in a Business of that Concernment) He proceeded to shew Reasons why the General should go on no further, telling him,

That it would put a Strife amongst those that hitherto had been Brethren engaged all along in the same Cause, partakers in the same Dangers, and the same Successes amongst those that still in their Papers and all their Addresses called and owned one another for Brethren, and that at a very unseasonable time, whilst the Cananites and Perizzites were in the Land: And thereupon he took occasion to enlarge himself upon all the Advantages the King and his Party would reap by this Quarrel, and all the Dangers the People of God (for so he called his own Party) might run into; And at last by way of Aggravation, he told the General, That what Inconveniences soever should happen, would be laid at his Door, in regard he would appear to have been the Beginner of the War.

At this the General, in a little heat, interrupted him, shewing, That the War was already begun by Lambert and his Party, who had offered violence to those, from whom they had all received their Commissions; not sparing freely, and at large to lay open their restless Instability, which would not suffer the three Nations to enjoy any settled Government at all, but keep them in a perpetual Circumvolution, till they were in danger to be brought to utter Ruine; repeating much of their Declarations, and many of their Actions; and declaring, That if they continued in that Course, he was resolved to oppose them to the uttermost, and would (to repeat his own words) lay them on their Backs.

Caryl and his fellow Commissioners endeavoured to excuse that Expression of theirs, which stirred up the Generals anger; and Barrow on the Generals side, did qualify and mitigate his Answer, not thinking it meet wholly to disoblige so considerable a Party as the Independents, as things stood at that time; and so by degrees Expressions came to be very calm on both sides, both being in expectation of the issue of the Treaty then on foot, between the Commissioners of the Army of Scotland, and those of the Army in England; but after this time there was no more Meetings, for upon News from England, that Matters were tending to Accommodation, these Commissioners thought their Business done, and made haste to return to London.

Clarges, disabled by his Fall, could not get soon enough to London, to prevent the hasty conclusion of the Treaty there, (which was concluded on the fifteenth of November) although he endeavoured by several Letters to Major Knight, one of the Commissioners, to prevent it, forasmuch as the rest of them were so prevailed on by the importunity of the English Officers, or else so terrified with their great Preparations, that he could not hinder the speed of it: As he came to London, he passed by Cambridge, and settled there a Correspondency with Mr. Pradman, one of the Fellows of Kings Colledge, by whose Care and Secrecy all his Packets were conveyed safe to Scotland, when all the ordinary ways were obstructed. Mean while, being much troubled to find, that that very night he arrived at London, the Treaty betwixt the Commissioners on both parts was concluded, he seriously expostulated with the Commissioners about about their precipitant proceeding, telling them what Progress he had made in his Negotiations, and that by the midst of January there would be in many places such strong Diversions made, that the General could not but obtain his Ends: That his Money would last till the beginning of February, and by that means his Men would be so united and encouraged, that if he did nothing but lye still, Lambert's Army by their great wants which made them insupportable to the Country) must break off themselves.

Knight was very sensible of his Error in this hasty Conclusion, and the rest were so far convinced, that in their Letter of the sixteenth of November, to the General-Council of the Officers of the Army in Scotland, giving them an Account of the conclusion of the Treaty, they confess, they had exceeded their Instructions, out of a Suspicion, as the Posture of Affairs then stood, that the Issue of the Difference, if longer continued, would not be to the Advantage of themselves, or of their Brethren of England, but of the Common Enemy.

The Agreement it self consisted of Nine Articles, which were expressed in the following words, viz,

The Articles of Agreement between the Commissioners of the two Armies.

1. That we will to the uttermost of our Powers, in our several Capacities, oppose the Interest and pretended Right of Charles Stewart, in and to the Government of these Nations, as also of all and every Person claiming a Right or Title to the said Government, or any share therein; together with, under or from him, or any other Person or Persons pleading or pretending such a Right or Title, by virtue of his or their descent from the same Line with him.

2. That we will not give our consent unto, but will oppose to our utmost Power, the setting up of any Single Person whatsoever, in the place of and for the Chief Magistrate of these Nations; and will endeavour to our utmost, that the Government of these Nations may be settled in the way of a Free-State, or Commonwealth, without a Single Person, Kingship or House of Lords.

3. That no form of Government shall be determined of, and asserted by any part of the Army, as the Supreme Legislative Authority of this Commonwealth, and the Territories thereunto belonging, without the Approbation and Consent of a General-Council of the Officers of the Army and Navy of this Commonwealth; which General-Council shall consist of two Commission-Officers for each Respective Regiment, chosen by the Commission-Officers of the said Regiment, or by the Major part of them who can conveniently meet together; and likewise such Governours of Garrisons as are not Regimented, and can conveniently be spared, may be called to the said Council, and ten Officers of the Fleet, chosen by a Council of the Officers of the Fleet; and that the Quorum shall be thirty one, and the day of their Meeting to be the sixth of December next at White-Hall in the Old Council-Room.

4. That a Parliament, or a Supreme Delegated Authority of this Commonwealth, be with all possible speed Constituted and Summoned in such manner and form as shall be by the aforesaid General-Council agreed unto; and the Qualifications of the Members thereof, to be agreed on by the Lord S. John, the Lord Warriston, Lieutenant-General Ludlow, Sir Henry Vane, Lord Whitlock, Sir James Harrington, Major Salway, Colonel George Thompson, Colonel Berry and Mr. Scot; together with the Lord Steel, Colonel Barrow, and Lieutenant-Colonel Dobson, as Commissioners for the Army in Ireland; and three Commissioners for the Army in England, to be appointed thereunto; with the three Commissioners for the Army of Scotland, whereof the Quorum to be Nine.

5. That the Proportion of Money out of the Assessments of England, formerly appointed for the Supply of the Forces of Scotland, be duly paid and no further stop upon the same, but that it may be returned by Bills of Exchange, or otherwise with all convenient speed, and any former Order and Orders to be made void.

6. That the case of the Officers of the Army of England and Scotland, that are suspended or displaced, or that have laid down their Commissions since the Eleventh of October last, only by reason of the precedent Differences, be determined by fourteen Commissioners of the Army in England and Scotland, or the major part of them; the one half of the said Commissioners to be chosen by the Council of Officers in England, and the other half, of the Council of Officers in Scotland; and that forthwith the said Officers be discharged from their Imprisonments or Confinements. The Day of Meeting of the said Commissioners, to be the first day of December next, and the place of their Meeting to be at Newcastle upon Tyne.

7. That no Officer, or Souldier, or other Person of these Nations, that have acted in the late Differences betwixt the late Parliament and the Army, or between any of the Forces of this Commonwealth, for or against each other, relating to any Difference, since the tenth of October last, be questioned for the same, but fully indemnified, and all Unkindness to be put in perpetual Oblivion.

8. That a Godly, Learned, and Faithful Ministry, with competent Maintenance, and other Encouragement, be continued in the three Nations, and that the Universities and Schools of Learning be so Countenanced and Reformed, as that they may become the Nurseries of Piety and Learning.

9. That the Forces of Horse and Foot respectively, both of England and Scotland, that have been drawn forth by reason of the late Difference, shall forthwith March to such Quarters in both Nations where they may best secure and preserve the Peace of the Commonwealth, against the Enemies thereof; and that there be no further difference or appearance of difference amongst Us.

We the Commissioners hereunto appointed and authorized by General Monk, and the General Council of Officers in Scotland, do this fifteenth of November, 1659. in the name, and on the behalf of the said General Monk, and General Council of Officers in Scotland, fully Consent and agree to the aforementioned Agreement, and and every part thereof, and do engage our selves and every of us to the full performance of the same.

Wallington and Lloyd, two Captains of the English Army at London, were sent with this Agreement to General Monk to put it in Execution; and as they went, Major Cambridge of Lambert's Army was sent by him in their Company. But Clarges was careful to send a Copy of it to him some days before they arrived; and the General was in much perplexity at the Receipt of it, as that which distracted his Design almost past recovery; he was resolved not to accept of it, but could not well tell how to decline it.

The General consults how he might with the handsomest pretence refuse his Assent to these Articles.

To take any pretence from those Articles which excluded the King's Government, would confirm the suspicion which was fomented of his secret Intentions for the Royal Family; and to ground his Dissent from the Subscription of the Commissioners, where they assume an authority (which they never had) and undertook for the performance of that Agreement for the General and all his Officers would not be thought material enough to continue the breach betwixt them; That which was most plausible, was to break it upon the Sixth Article, where it was provided, That all the Officers displaced by General Monk, might be in a Capacity of being restored to other Commands; and all those put by him in their place (wherein his strength consisted) be removed; he called together a few of his Confidants to advise what to do; these were Major General Morgan, Colonel Fairfax, Colonel Lydcott, Doctor Barrow, and Mr. Gumble; Lydcott was admitted, because he was from a private Captain newly preferred to the Command of Cobbet's Regiment, and therefore by interest supposed to be averse to this Agreement. The General and these Gentlemen having had much discourse of the business, they all thought it fit to disapprove of the Agreement, but differed in the manner; but at last it was by Barrow proposed, and agreed to by the General and the rest, That they should not declare a positive dissent to what their Commissioners had done; but urge, that there was something untreated of, further to be agreed upon; and some of those things consented to by their Commissioners, which without further explication, could not stand with their Declaration or Instructions; and that therefore it should be desired, that two more might be allowed to be added to their Commissioners, to meet a like number of theirs to be thereunto authorized, to put a more absolute period to their differences.

The same Evening, Wallington, Lloyd and Cambridge arrived; and the next morning at a General Council of Officers at Edinburgh, when the Agreement was communicated to them, they were so artificially prepared, that they unanimously disrelieved it, and a Letter was framed, which they all subscribed, to the same purpose with what was agreed on the day before, and Lloyd and those with him went with it to London.

The City of London was very much discontented at the Committee of Safety, and Fleetwood became doubtful of them: But to heighten them the more, General Monk sent a Letter to the Lord Mayor and Common Council, which was delivered to them by Mr. Atkins and Colonel Markham, about the seventeenth or eighteenth of November: wherein he acquainted them,

That at the first notice he had of the Force upon the Parliament, he had sent a Letter to them, declaring his Resolution to endeavour their Re-establishment, and that his Army was very Unanimous to concur with him in it; but that Letter miscarrying, he had with the advice of his Officers now again written to them, to let them know, they were constant to their first Resolution; and were the more confirmed in it, for being informed that the Authors of that Force had proceeded so far as to null and make void some Acts of Parliament; (which the King when he was at the highest, never attempted to do, and which no true Englishman can endure to see done, by any but Parliaments themselves) and after they had subverted the Foundation of an ancient Government, were contriving by their own Power and Authority to set up a new Government over the Nations, Adding, that if this should be suffered, he knew not to what purpose so much Blood had been spilt, so much Treasure spent, and so many Engagements made; They must take upon themselves the Guilt of all, and look upon this Slavery they had brought upon themselves, as a Judgment upon them for their Murders, Rapines and Perjuries: He protested to aim only at the restoring Parliaments to their former Freedom and Authority, and the People to their Just Rights and Liberties; in which he expected to be sure of their Assistance. As to Religion, he told them, he intended not that those that truly feared God, should be abridged of their Worship, but he should be unwilling that some under pretence of maintaining that Liberty, should endeavour the overthrow of National Ministry, and by consequence leave the greatest part of the People to utter Ignorance and Atheism: Concluding nevertheless, That Religion was not that about which he did at present contend, being desirous to leave that to the Consideration of the Parliament, for the Defence whereof, he and those with him were resolved to venture to the utmost; and if he should miscarry through want of their timely aid, it would be too late for them by their own

own strength to assert their Freedom; And if he succeeded, it would be dishonourable for so Famous a City, and so much Concerned, that its Liberty should be asserted without its own help: inciting them therefore now whilst so great an Army is waiting on him in the North, to use their Endeavours in the South, &c.

The Letter look't upon as fictitious, and the Messengers imprisoned.

This Letter was dated the 12th of November at Edinburgh, and did so much incense the Committee of Safety, that the Gentlemen who delivered it were put into Custody: And the more to aggravate the business, Monk's Commissioners were either so imprudent, or so unsincere, as to declare, That they believed the Letter was fictitious; which made the City less active in pursuance of the Contents of it.

Whilst things were thus traversed in London, Fleetwood, Lambert, and all the Officers in England, could not dissemble their Confusion of Mind upon Monk's refusal to ratify the Treaty, and sending for a Blank Pass to insert new names of additional Commissioners; and many Expulstatory Letters passed betwixt them about it, but more especially betwixt Lambert and his Officers, and him; for they were very apprehensive, that this motion of a Blank Pass for adding to their Commissioners, or the naming of new ones, was only meant to gain time; but at last they did consent to it, though it never came to any effect, as shall be hereafter discovered.

Nine of the Old Council of State meet.

Nine of the old Council of State met privately in London the nineteenth of November, they a little resented, that General Monk's Commissioners did not communicate their Counsels with them, yet omitted not to give him all the encouragement they could; And in order therunto, one Captain Elms, with Horton a Servant of Sir Arthur Hazlerig's was sent with a Letter to him to Scotland; wherein they signified,

And send a Letter to the General.

That his faithful Actions in discharge of his Trust and Duty to that Parliament, and for the good of the Three Nations and Posterity in these Times of so great Hypocrisie and Defection, was most gratefully acknowledged by them; and they assured him, his Service was exceedingly well resented by all sober and interested persons, that love a Commonwealth; and that he might be confident, that they would adhere to him, and to their utmost promote the good Cause which he had hitherto with so much Wisdom and Courage highly owned, and that it was their Resolution to stand and fall with him in defence thereof; and that they would, as occasion should offer it self, the Lord enabling, be assisting to him according to his Declaration for removing the Force from this Parliament, that so they may Sit with Freedom, and, by Gods blessing, lay a Foundation of a happy and lasting Settlement.

Henry Nevil,

This was a great Encouragement to the Officers in Scotland; for the wisest of them did conclude from these appearances of Action at London, that their Party was increased in England, imagining that otherwise they durst not have so openly acted.

Colonel Whetham at Portsmouth was labouring to frame a Design of declaring for General Monk with that Garrison; and Colonel Morley, Walton, and Hazlerig went privately towards him to Treat about it: But before they went, the Council of State, at another Meeting before the time appointed by Parliament for their continuance was expired, framed a Commission, wherein they constituted General Monk Absolute Commander in Chief of all the Armies in England and Scotland, which was Dated the 24th of November, sealed with their Seal, and left in the hands of Clarges, till a safe Messenger might be sent with it to him.

As soon as Fleetwood had received General Monk's Letters against the Ratification of the Treaty, and his desire to have two more Commissioners added to his, to renew the Treaty at Newcastle, Wilks, Cloeberry, and Knight, the Commissioners had their dispatch, and a Pass to license their repair thither; But before they got to Newcastle, at a Meeting of all Lambert's Officers, a Letter was framed, and sent by Colonel Zanchy to General Monk's Officers, and one from Lambert to the General himself.

In that from the Officers they write, That they had advised their General to acquaint General Monk, that if he pleased to appoint two Commissioned Officers of his Army to be added to those already in England, and signifie their Names to him, a safe Conduct should be forthwith given to them; but withall, That nothing in the Agreement be parted from, nor any new matter, or further explanations admitted, which are not consentaneous to what is already concluded; And that the General Council (agreed upon in the third Article of the Agreement at London) to meet upon the sixth of December, may accordingly hold their meeting. And in a Postscript to this Letter, they complained of the detention of Colonel Cobbet, who, they said, was a Publick Messenger, and desired therefore he might enjoy his Priviledge accordingly, except by some miscarriage he had forfeited the same. Colonel Zanchy was very kindly receiv'd by General Monk and all his Officers, and they met together with all convenient haste to give him his dispatch; acquainting him, That they should not disown any thing in that Agreement that was conformable to the Instructions by which their Commissioners were authorized; but what should appear to be beyond, they insisted to have it Treated on and explained. As to the third Article, mentioned in their Letter, they would not admit of any meeting in pursuance of it, till the whole should be concluded. And concerning Cobbet, they alledged, That he came not to Scotland as a Publick Messenger, but as a Colonel to Command a Regiment (after his Commission had been vacated by the Parliament, the day before their Interruption) and without any leave from General Monk; And that the General had intimation from a Person of Credit, That he had a design design to seduce the Army from their obedience, if not to seize on his Person. This Letter was signed the 7th of December at night, and the next day Colonel Zanchy was to have returned with it to Newcastle, but upon Intelligence received, that a Party of Lamberts, consisting of three Regiments of Horse, and a Regiment of Dragoons, with two Drakes was marched into Northumberland, and that sixty Dragoons had possessed themselves of Chillingham Castle, near the Scotch Borders, the Colonel was staid; and the General, at three of the Clock the next morning, marched out of Barwick, and sent order to draw his Forces together toward Coldstream, a very convenient Pass upon the Tweed, where he settled his Head-Quarters. A little before this, his own Commissioners were come to him to Barwick, where he confined Colonel Wilks for discovering, or at least not pursuing some private Instructions; but after a while he was released, upon satisfaction that what he did was out of Ignorance, and not Malice.

Col. Whetham at Portsmouth declares for Monk.

Colonel Whetham at Portsmouth, very generously declared for General Monk, with that Garrison, after he had secured Captain Peacock, and Captain Brown, and some other refractory Officers, that he was jealous of.

Commissioners from the several Shires and Burroughs of Scotland wait upon the General at Barwick.

Commissioners from the several Shires and Burroughs of Scotland, being summoned to wait upon the General, and he having appointed them to be at Barwick the thirteenth of December, he came on that day thither to meet them accordingly, releasing Zanchy, and sending by him a Letter to Lambert, wherein he acquainted him, he would by the next Post more fully inform him of his Resolutions.

The Scotch Commissioners appointed five to attend the General, and treat with him, which were the Earls of Glencarne, Rothes, Weams, and Eglington, and Mr. Alexander Bruce. These presented a Paper to the General, consisting of five Proposals.

Their Propositions.

1. That the Lord General may be pleased to appoint a Committee in each Shire, for regulating the Affairs thereof, in order to his Lordships Commands, and their own preservation.

2. That his Lordship will allow each Shire presently to raise (for the securing the Peace, and their own safety) some small proportion of Horses, under the Conduct of such Persons as his Lordship shall think fit to trust.

3. That his Lordship will declare, for the greater encouragement of the Shires, at the return of their Commissioners, if the Treaty shall break up, and take no effect, immediately upon the notice thereof, that he did authorize the Shires to put themselves in the best posture they can for his Assistance, and their own Defence.

4. That for the said effect, his Lordship will be pleased to furnish each Shire with some proportion of Arms, upon payment of just Rates thereof, within one Months time after the Receipt of them.

5. That all Gentlemen who are free to comply with his Lordships desires, may for themselves and Servants have Liberty to carry their Arms.

The General, upon the receipt of this Paper, The General advised with some select Officers about an Answer to it, viz. Colonel Fairfax, Major Jeremiah Smith, Colonel Lydcot, Colonel Read, and Doctor Barrow. And the chief Question debated on, was, whether they should permit the Scots to Arm for their Assistance? Colonel Read was for Arming them: He argued, that it was a common danger, and they ought to make use of any aid that could be obtained for their defence. The General himself told them, That if he should draw all the men from his Garrisons, he could make his numbers of Foot quickly equal to Lamberts, but he had hitherto declined that, being unwilling to put Scotland out of English hands, and that he doubted not, if he could get a few more Horse than he had, even with those Foot he had without weakening his Garrisons, he should well enough defend himself against Lambert.

Others were of opinion, that although they should not imploy whole Troops, or Companies of Scots, yet they might safely mingle a good party of them with the English. But Doctor Barrow was against all motions of Arming the Scots at that time, believing if it were done, many of their own men might desert them, but if the General would take any opportunity, though it were but to beat up any of Lambert's Quarters, so that they might once come to Blood, that the division being likely to increase after such an action, he might then strengthen himself with what Accessions he pleased. Nevertheless, he moved that some privately might confer with the leading men of the Scotch Gentry, to try if they would be brought to provide any numbers of Horses, on which the General might mount English to reinforce his own Troops. This last was approved as to the main Question; but upon the whole debate, they agreed upon particular Answers to every Article in the Generals name.

1. To the First, That he would authorize the Noblemen and Justices of the Peace of each County with the Advice and Consent of the Governour of the next adjacent Garrison, to put in execution such Orders and Commands as his Lordship shall give for securing the Peace of the County. The Generals Answer to the Scots Propositions.

2. To the Second, That he would allow the Counties next adjacent to the High-Lands, viz. to the County of Dumbarton and Sterlin, Forty men to bear Arms; To the County of Perth, Forty men in Arms; To the County of Forfar and Kinkardine, Forty men in Arms; And to the County of Aberdeen, Forty men in Arms, which are to be a Guard for the security of the said Counties against Thieves and Robbers. And for the rest of the Shires, his Lordship would take care, if he should have occasion to remove farther out of Scotland: And he would allow the Heretors of the above-named Shires, to make choice of a fit Person to Command the said respective Guards; They giving Security to the Governour of the next adjacent Garrison, for their Fidelity and good behaviour, in Six hundred Pounds Sterling.

3. To the third, His Lordship deferr'd his Answer, till the Issue of the Treaty now intended intended between him and the English Army.

4. To the Fourth, That he would furnish them with fit means for their defence, whensoever he should apprehend their Peace and Safety to be in imminent danger.

5. To the Fifth, Such Noblemen and Gentlemen as should subscribe to live peaceably, and Act nothing to the prejudice of England, should have liberty with Passes to wear their Swords, and have four Servants armed for their Attendants.

Glencarn's Arguments to the General, for arming the Scots to his assistance.

At a Conference with the Scotch Commissioners, upon the delivery of these Answers to their Propositions, they seemed unsatisfied with them, and the Earl of Glencarne in the name of the rest, told the General, Since they were willing to hazard their Persons and Estates with him, they hoped he would not deny them to Arm for his Assistance and their own Safety, since if he should engage and be worsted, they should be exposed to great ruine for their Affection and Respect to him, from which otherwise, by a Neutrality, they might be secure. To which he answered, That if that should happen, they should then Arm to what numbers they pleased. To this the Earl Replied, That the Country were now willing to rise in Confidence of his Conduct and Courage, but if his Force should be defeated, they would not be perswaded to it. And besides, they could not under six weeks time make their Levies. And if permission were now denied, the Enemy, if Victorious, would be in their Bowels before they should be in a posture of Defence.

The Scotch Nobility depart home from Barwick.

The cautious General would not be prevailed on with these Arguments, and so they departed, he returned to Coldstream to his Quarters, and the Scotch Noblemen and Gentlemen to their several Countries.

They had absolutely refused the raising any Horse to mount English, yet this came to no breach between them and the General, in regard, before they left Barwick, the General acquainted them with Intelligence he had received from England, of the distractions in the English Armies and other Affairs, which made them to fear less than before, their own peace at home, and so all parted with mutual respect.

The General prepares to make defence against Lambert, if occasion were.

After this meeting, the General was contriving how to break off the Treaty with Lambert, which he had hitherto, not without great Artifice delayed; but he considered, that as soon as that should be done, Lambert would march towards him, and therefore he made preparation to fight him, if occasion should urge him to it. In order to which, he sent an express to Clarges, to provide him some good Horse-Officers, and send them by Sea in a nimble Bark. Mean while, in Northumberland the Eagles raised him two compleat Troops, and more Horse were raising. He increased his number of Pikes in each Company, to be equal to his Musquets, as thereby to be better able to make defence against Horse, in which Lambert's greatest strength was placed.

What advantages he had against Lambert's Army.

Coldstream was nine miles from Barwick upon the Tweed, and he had quartered all his men so conveniently, that he could draw them all together in six hours; for the Villages are much thicker upon the Scotch than English Borders. And if Lambert marched towards him, the Villages in Northumberland being thin, he must have quartered at such distance, that his men would have been exposed to great hazard of being often disturbed in their Quarters. And if he had marched to fight, the General, being upon the defensive part, could have brought as many hands to action as he. Or if he had marched to Carlisle, to have invaded Scotland that way; Monk would then have marched directly to London, and should have been two or three days march before him. Or if he had divided his Army, the General would have presently fallen on the nearest part to him. In this posture he lay at Coldstream, when he received Intelligence from Clarges "That there were many great differences in London, between Fleetwood and the City. That the Apprentices, and several others in favour of him, had many Consultations to make disturbances; that they were framing a Petition to the Lord Mayor and Common-Council, to press their Interposition for the restoring the Parliament, and preservation of Magistracy, which was endeavoured to be suppressed by the Committee of Safety, who emitted a Proclamation to prohibit all gathering of hands to Petitions, which incensed the young Men so much (being fomented by wiser heads) that they rose in many places in a tumultuous manner. And thereupon, Colonel Hewson was sent into London to suppress them, whereby a rumour was raised, that the Souldiers came to plunder them, and all Shops were shut up, and many reproachful Words passed in the Streets, between the Souldiers and Apprentices, to that heat of Passion, that two of the Apprentices were slain, and about twenty wounded, and the rest for that time dispersed. But the Souldiers were so vilified, scorn'd and hiss'd, that they were ashamed to march, and many Officers when they went into the City, durst not wear Swords for fear of affronts, and that many of the Private Souldiers, especially the Horse, wished themselves with him; Captain Izod, and others, being active to draw them from Fleetwood's Party. That he had sent Captain Goodwin with some Horse-Officers to him by Sea to Barwick, and that Goodwin had his Lordships Commission for Commander in Chief, of all the Armies in England and Scotland. And that he had treated with Mr. Phillip Howard, who had undertaken to raise an hundred Gentlemen well armed and mounted in Northumberland and Cumberland, on Condition to Command them for his Lifeguard, which he had promised his Lordship should consent to; but that just as he was preparing for his journey, he was taken with the Small Pox, but his Elder Brother in the mean time, had writ and undertook to promote the Levies of the Men; that he had treated with Colonel Redman, a gallant Horse-Officer, and Colonel Bret, who had been both by Ludlow removed from their Commands, to draw off the Irish Brigade Differences between the City of London and the Armies Party there.

The Souldiers affronted by the Apprentices, notwithstanding.

Oppositions from all parts increase against Lambert's faction.

A Letter of Advice from Monk to Lam- bert.

Upon Receipt of these Letters, the General writ to Lambert, by Major Bannister, one of the Officers at Barwick, acquainting him, That since his last by Zanchy, he had certain Advice, That three of the Commissioners appointed by Act of Par- liament, for the Government of the Army, were now in Portsmouth, acting by vertue of the same Authority, upon which he Acted, and declaring for the same ends: And that he and the Army were thereby obliged in Honour and Duty, to take their Advice and Consent in all Affairs that relate to the Cause they are now engaged in, which he doubted not, but he would judge reasonable and necessary;
 and therefore he desired a safe Conduct for the Major,
 to acquaint them with what had passed in the several Overtures betwixt them; but withall, he told him freely, he could not think it adviseable to proceed further in Treaty (and he expected the other Commissioners would be of the same mind) till he remanded all those Troops he had sent into North- umberland, Cumberland, and Westmoreland, during that time.

The Treaty between Monk and Lambert
broke off.

pearance

Commissioners.

Lambert upon advice with his Officers would not let Bannister pass, but sent him back to Bar- wick, for he began now plainly to perceive, that the General intended nothing less than to treat further; whereupon both sides prepared for War: but Lambert was so daily alarm'd with the success of the Commissioners at Portsmouth, and the daily submission of several Troops and Companies of men, that he thought it more necessary to march Southward to assist his Friends in London, than hazard Battel with General Monk.

Fleetwood, and the rest of the Committee of Safety were in no less disorder than Lambert, but that which most amused them, was the Declaration of Lawson with his Fleet for the Par- liament (which was chiefly transacted by the endeavours of Colonel Streater, an Active Instrument for the King in all these Revolutions, who was forc'd to fly thither upon discovery of a Design he had to seize on the Tower) for they thought themselves sure of Lawson, and by his defection (added to the rest) their Authority came to be generally despised, even by their own Souldiers, so that they abandoned all; and Fleetwood, with great contrition and submission, in behalf of his Confederates, sent to the Speaker to desire him to send to the rest of the Parliament Members, and with them to return to the exercise of their Trust and Power for the Government of the Nation; acknowledging, That the Lord had blasted their Counsels, and (to repeat his own words) spit in their faces.

Upon this several Members met privately in the Speakers House, and gave Colonel Okey, Colonel Markham, Colonel Allured, and Colonel Moss orders to draw the Regiments about West- minster to a Rendezvouze in Lincolns-Inne-fields; which being performed accordingly, the Souldiers declared to live and die with the Parliament, and marched down Chancery-lane, where at the Rolls they made a halt till the Speaker came to them, and received their acknowledgements, and from thence by his Orders, they went to their Quarters, having first from him received the Word.

And two days after, that is to say, on the twenty sixth of December, in the Evening, the Speaker and the Members of Parliament, resumed the Government, and sate in the Parliament-House, having met first at White-hall in the Council-Chamber, from whence they went on foot through Chanon-Row (the Mace being carried before the Speaker) to Westminster-hall, where as they pass'd, the Souldiers upon the Guard stood in Ranks, and made acclamations. At their first meeting, They Ordered Colonel Alexander Po- pham, Colonel Thompson, Mr. Scot, Colonel Okey, Sir Anthony Ashley Cooper, Colonel Matthew Al-
lured, and Colonel Markham, or any three of them, to order, direct, and Conduct the Forces of the Army, and all other Forces, and to Command the same to suppress all Tumults, Insurrections, and Rebellions, and all such Forces which shall oppose or resist the Command of the Parliament, and to observe such Orders and Directions as they should receive from time to time from the Parliament, or the Commissioners appointed by Act of Parliament, to Command the Army, or any three of them, till they shall come to London or Westminster, or until the Parliament shall take further order.

sioners for nagement

my.

From these Commissioners an Order was sent to Lambert to disperse his Forces, but they were upon breaking before notice thereof came to him.

We made some relation of a Treaty betwixt
 Mr. Evelyn and Colonel Morley, which at this time Mr. Evelyn thought to bring to some advantageous issue; for Morley upon this Change had his Regiment restored, and with it the Government of the Tower conferred on him,
 and

and his Brother Colonel Fagg had also a Regiment; Mr. Evelyn had done for him towards his Majesty, all he desired, for Pardon of him and his Friends; but when he came to him with the report of it, he was very reserved, and would not entertain any discourse with him of that matter, and after one time would rarely admit him into his Company, which made him suspect he had altered his Intentions, and put him to the hazardous experiment of a sharp and expostulatory Letter; but he was newly involved with General Monk, and Sir Anthony Ashley Cooper in intrigues of the like nature, which he durst not communicate; and Affairs were not yet mature enough for the things which Mr. Evelyn proposed, nor was he assured of the Officers and Souldiers in the Tower for such a Service; but it is most certain he received such impressions from Mr. Evelyn's former discourses, that he was one of the forwardest of his Party to embrace all occasions for the King's Service, as was evident by his early, vigorous and hazardous opposition in Parliament, shortly after their sitting, to that impious Oath of abjuration of the King's Family and Line (hereafter mentioned.)

The Irish Brigade brought off to Monk by Redman
and Bret.

The manner of surprizing
Dublin Castle.

When the Parliament thus reconvened, and Lambert in his declension; the Irish Brigade submitted to Redman and Bret, and was brought off by them; and at the same time, the Souldiers of two Dunkirk Regiments, then with Lambert, were in Mutiny for the General, who scarce had received Information of these Actings, when Captain Campbell also arrived at Coldstream with Letters from Sir Hardress Waller, and others from Dublin, with Intelligence of the Surprisal of Dublin Castle by Captain Foyer and Captain Bond, which was thus performed; one of Bond's men softly knocking at the Gates, the Sentinel opened the door, and as he opened it, the rest presently rushed in, and on a suddain surprized them within, and seized on Colonel John Jones, Miles Corbet, Colonel Matthew Thomlinson, Colonel Richard Lawrence, Lieutenant-Colonel Henry Jones, Mr. Standish the Treasurer, and Tombes the Store-keeper: The Design was chiefly managed at Dublin, by Sir Theophilus Jones, Trevor, the three Warrens, Colonel Bridges, Thompson, Lisle, Worder and Temple, having been two months in Agitation, and was the more dangerous, because but in one of Five Foot Companies that Quartered in the City, they could repose any Confidence; neither durst they communicate their Intentions with more than one Officer of that Company, and some few Officers of Horse, whom they engaged out of three Troops; and so much they differed about the time of putting the business in execution, that till the night before the action, they had not resolved it: The pretext made use of for the business, was their Meeting to promote a Petition in the Army to call a General Council; which so dazed the Eyes of the Commander in Chief, and several other of his Confidants, that they suspected no other thing to have been intended. And that which the Execution was most remarkable is, that not one drop of Blood was shed. The next day after, the City of Dublin drew out their Militia, and declared with them; and although they had but eight hours notice, there appeared above two thousand Foot, besides Horse.

Cornet Monk was privy to the design, and sent to Wexford, Waterford, and those parts, to incline them to joyn in it: But Sir Charles Coote and his Brothers had the hardest Task in the Province of Connaught; but they overcame all difficulties, and in a very short time brought the whole Souldiery and Garrison there to obedience, and in less than a Weeks space, Limrick, Clonmel, Youghal, Ross, Kilkenny, Drogheda, Dundalk, Antrim, and many other places declared their Concurrence.

The General always carrying an even temper in his behaviour, seem'd not much exalted with this News; yet since it was likely to prove of no small Concernment to himself, he presently dispatch'd Captain Campbell back, with great acknowledgments of these Services, and desired to be supplied by them with six Troops of Horse with all convenient speed: This good news was seconded with advice from Bowles of the Lord Fairfax's Rising in York-shire, which was somewhat sooner than his promise, but very seasonable to make a diversion to Lambert's Forces, with whom Colonel Lilburn's Regiment joyned by means of Major Smithson, who was a great lover of General Monk, and Colonel Redman came in to them with the Irish Brigade; Colonel Bethel, Sir Henry Cholmley, Captain Strangwaies, and Mr. Arthington also joyned with them; the said Messenger also informed him, that the Parliament was again Sitting, and that Fleetwood had submitted to them; which made the General immediately march (for he heard that Lambert kept his Brigade together, and intended to oppose the Lord Fairfax and his Friends, and having quitted Newcastle, was marched towards them;) wherefore on the second of January at night he advanced with two Regiments of Horse and two of Foot, and marched to Wooller: He had the day before sent Colonel Knight with three Troops to Morpeth, to whom he that night sent Orders to seize on Newcastle, which he did by six of the Clock in the morning. Major General Morgan was left sick, and Colonel Read, who commanded the Rear of the Army, marched the next day with two Regiments of Horse, and three Regiments of Foot, with which his whole number amounted in all to five thousand Foot, and two thousand Horse. By that time he came to Morpeth, he had Information that Lambert's whole party was of themselves dispersed into several Quarters in Submission to the Parliaments Orders. And to assure him of the Parliaments Sitting, he received a Letter from the Speaker, dated the 27 of December of thanks for his Service; wherein the restitution of their Authority was wholly attributed to his Fidelity, Care and Courage.

The knowledge of this did more than any thing perplex the General, as one of the most fatal Accidents that could happen to him; for by their over-hasty Resumption of Power, back'd with a great Army newly return'd to their Obedience, he despaired of doing the good he intended to his Country, and thought no longer of continuing in Arms than till a fair Opportunity should be offered him to lay them down and retire, without making them jealous of him; For he expected they would not have thought their Sitting safe, till his arrival at London with his Army, and then he would have restored all the other Members with them without undertaking to judge of the Difference betwixt them.

Here receives an Address at Morpeth from the City of London by their Sword-Bearer. As likewise from the Gentry of the County in all parts as he marched along. He is visited at York by the Lord Fairfax.

When he came to Morpeth, Mr. William Man, the Sword-Bearer of London, came to him, with a very respectful Letter from the Lord Mayor and Common-Council of London; to which he made a civil Return the next day from New-Castle, and thence he marched with continued Journeys to York, where he continued five days, and all the way as he marched from Cold-stream he was met by the Gentry, and saluted by all the People as he passed, with great Acclamations of Joy. Colonel Waters the Sheriff of Yorkshire, met him betwixt Allerton and Topcliffe, several of the Gentry having attended him the day before at his first entrance into the County. At York he was visited by the Lord Fairfax, whom he received with much kindness and respect, and very civilly acknowledged Mr. Bowles his diligent and industrious acting in his Concerns; there he modelled Lambert's and Lilburn's Regiments of Horse, and gave the first of them to Colonel Bethel, and the latter to Smithson, and chang'd most of the other Officers.

The new restored Members begin very Actively in settling their Affairs; and on the second of January they name one and thirty to be of the Council of State, passing an ACT for their Constitution; and several Instructions for them to Act by: amongst which it was provided, that none should sit but such as should take an Oath of Abjuration of the King, his Family and Government.

The Names of the intended Counsellors of State were;

The Names of the Persons nominated for the Council of State.	Sir Arthur Haslerig,	Mr. Henry Nevil,
	Colonel Morley,	Colonel Fagg,
	Mr. Wallop,	Mr. John Corbet,
	Mr. Scot,	Mr. Tho. Challoner,
	Mr. Love,	Mr. Say,
	Mr. Weaver,	Sir Anthony Ashley Cooper,
	Colonel White,	General Monk,
	Mr. Reynolds,	Lord Fairfax,
	Mr. Robinson,	Vice-Admiral Lamson,
	Mr. Rob. Roll,	Josias Barners,
	Sir James Harrington,	Serjeant Terril,
	Colonel Thompson,	Slingsby Bethel,
	Sir Tho. Widdrington,	Alderman Foot,
	Colonel Dixwell,	Alderman Love.

The form of an Oath of Abjuration to be taken by all the Members of the Council of State and Parliament.

The Oath was in these following words: viz.

I do hereby Swear, That I do renounce the pretended Title of Charles Stewart, and the whole Line of the late King James, and of every other Person, as a Single Person, pretending, or which shall pretend to the Crown or Government of these Nations of England, Scotland or Ireland, or any of them, and the Dominions and Territories belonging to them, or any of them; And that I will by the Grace and Assistance of Almighty God, be true, faithful and constant to the Parliament and Commonwealth, and will oppose the bringing in, or setting up any Single Person or House of Lords, and every of them in this Commonwealth.

This Oath being stricter than any that had ever been imposed, was by many disliked; however, the leading Men that promoted it in Parliament affirmed, That without this, they could have no certain assurance of Power; And that the Hollanders, and those of the Confederated Provinces could never be fix'd in their Government, till they had made a Renunciation of the King of Spain. And to that height this business was brought, that not thinking it enough for the Council of State, they drove on to have it ordered, that every Member in the House should also take the said Oath: This was strongly opposed by Colonel Fielder, Weaver, Dove, Hutchinson, both the Purities, Ingoldshy, and many more of the soberer sort, Who alledged it would be a Confining of Providence to make such an Oath, a Snare to many good Men, and a Terrour to such as were truly Conscientious, who might suspect this to be a fore-runner of many Oaths to fetter their Consciences. Of these more moderate sort of men, Fielder and Ingoldshy only were thought Favourers of the Kings Party, but the rest were such of whom they had no manner of Jealousie at that time; though afterwards they appeared much inclined to a Conjunction with the Secluded Members, and well disposed to Monarchy: So that when the Act for the Council of State came to be executed, in that part of it which was the Administration of the Oath, Mr. Weaver, Colonel Morley, Oliver St. John, Colonel Fagg, the Lord Fairfax, and many more, even a third part at least of their number refused it, and were therefore not admitted to Sit and Act.

The Oath opposed by several of the House.

Whilest the General staid at York, he had Intimation, that Overton was taking Beds into Hull, breaking the Ice in the Grays, and making such preparation as if he took him rather for an enemy than a Friend; wherefore he sent Major Smith to him, one well known in that Garrison, to inspect into the condition of it, and writ a Letter to Overton, to expostulate with him about the Matter: who returned in Answer to him, That he perceived Rumour had rendred Hull as doubtful to him, as it had his Design dangerous to them and others; but he was glad to hear that he adhered to this Parliament in their present Constitution, against the re-admission of the Secluded Members, a free Parliament or Single Person, one of which had been continually charged upon him by the Common Cry of the Army.

The Leading Members of Parliament, finding this difference growing amongst themselves about the Oath of Abjuration, contrived how to draw the General to their Party; and in order thereunto, Scot and Robinson, two of their Members were sent to meet him upon the way to gratulate his Return, but with private directions to engage him to take the Oath as soon as he came to London, before he took his place in the Council of State.

OF

Of these their Instructions Clarges having timely notice, was resolved to be with the General before them; but before he went, he privately got from Quarter-Master-General Butler a List of all the Quarters in London, for a purpose which shall be discovered hereafter.

On the twelfth of January, the House, to testify their Confidence in the General, passed a Vote, To approve of all he had done in order to the Service of the Parliament; and Ordered their Vote to be Printed: When he removed from York, he sent one of the Dunkirk Regiments of Foot, Commanded by Colonel Clark, and Major General Morgans Regiment of Horse, into Scotland, which, with those he left in Garrison there, he thought enough to secure the Peace of that Kingdom, till time should admit further Consideration thereof. He left Colonel Fairfax his Regiment at York, and disbanded some Companies of Ashfield's Regiment, and mingled the Private Souldiers thereof amongst his Regiments to fill up the Companies: And then having given the Council of State an Account of what he had done, he proceeded in his March towards London with four Regiments of Foot, viz. his Own, Colonel Reads, Colonel Lydcotts, and Colonel Hubblehornes; and three Regiments of Horse, viz. his Own, Colonel Knights, and Colonel Cloeberries, which made his number in all 5800 besides Officers; that is, Four Thousand Foot, and Eighteen Hundred Horse; He came the nineteenth day of January to Nottingham, where Clarges came to him the day following, on which day also, Scot and Robinson arrived at Leicester; and, because the next day was Sunday, they rested there, and met the General upon the Road, betwixt Leicester and Nottingham the twenty second.

At Nottingham, Clarges, having had secret Conference with the General, communicated to him in what Condition all Affairs stood at London, and that they had there two thousand Horse, and eight thousand Foot, most of them modelled to their own Principles; That the Horse were the Regiments of Okey, Hazlerig, Rich, and Desborow; and though they had newly given the last to Sir Anthony Ashley Cooper, yet all the Officers under him were of the same Mould as the former. The Regiments of Foot were commanded by Ayres, Markham, Streeter, Fitch, Moss, Fleetwood, Morley and Fagg; of all which, he could have no assurance but of the two last: for Morley's men were firm to him, deserted their Officers in the North, and declared for him; and Fagg's was a new Regiment, raised about Portsmouth in his behalf. He told him, That except he could get all these Horse and Foot out of London, (except Morley's and Fagg's Regiments) and disperse them into several Quarters, and march his own men thither, and be Master of London, he could never expect to do any good for his Country; since in all these times, it had been experienced, That to what ever was done at London, where they had nine or ten thousand Men to justify their Actions, all the rest of the Regiments submitted.

And, if his distinct and absolute Command in Scotland had not happened in a Conjunction when Fleetwood and Lambert, the two Chief Officers of the Army, were in a Jealousie of each other, and their Treasure quite exhausted, he had never been able to have stood against them; and although there was that Jealousie, and the Principles on which he declared were such, as most of these in Command favoured; yet how slowly did Ireland and the Fleet joyn with him? And even the Council of State themselves (who had the temptation of Power to excite them) were backward enough to appear, till they saw a Distraction in the other Counsels; for fear, as some of the Chief of them alledged, lest the Kings Party might have Opportunity to mingle with their Levies, if they should make any: These Considerations took such impression in the General, as made him apprehend great Difficulties in what he went about, till Clarges told him, There were yet probable Hopes to make him Master of his wishes, which he proposed thus: He told him, The Council of State consisted of such only as had taken the Oath of Abjuration; and till he should take that, they would be so diffident of him, that whatever he desired of them, of any material Concernment, would be denied; That the major part in Parliament were against the Oath; and therefore in all his Affairs he was to apply himself to them, and therefore that his best way would be to write them a Letter to this purpose, That he thought it inconvenient for their Service, that so many of the Souldiery now in London, lately in Rebellion against them, should be trusted with their Guards, till the present Officers by them placed upon them, should have by Discipline reduced them to perfect obedience. To which the General answered, That he approved of the Advice, but if they should offer to have an equal Number of his Regiments with the other, that Objection would be removed; and besides, he believed he had not men enough to supply the Guards, which these now in London kept.

To this Clarges replied, It was worth his Attempt to endeavour this; and that the same Reason for not mingling the men, might hold as for not trusting them intire: but as concerning their Guards, that he had brought with him a List of all their Quarters, and did believe his three Regiments of Horse, being in number, within two hundred, as many as the four now there, they might do the same Duty; and that his four Regiments of Foot, now full as they were, might well keep the same Guards as six of theirs.

The General in fine approving of all he said, Clarges drew the Letter to the Parliament, for him to sign, in these words:

Right Honourable,

I Have lately acquainted the Council of State with what Forces I have sent into Scotland, and more are necessary to be sent thither, to re-inforce them, and secure the Peace of that Countrey, which I presume they have been pleased to report to you; I am now marched in obedience to your Commands thus far on my way towards London, with four Regiments of Foot, and two Regiments of Horse; each

The Generals Letter to the House

each Regiment of Foot containing a thousand, and each Regiment of Horse six hundred; so that by a List which I have sent to me from the Quarter-Master-General of the Horse and Foot in London, I have disposed of these Regiments which march with me: And I humbly offer, That all those now in London, except Colonel Fagg's Regiment, and Col. Morley's, may be sent to the several Quarters by me assigned; for, with submission, I conceive it not for your Service, that those Souldiers now in London, lately in Rebellion against you, should mingle with these your approved faithful Regiments, till the present Officers by you put upon them have by Discipline reduced them to a more assured Obedience to You. The three Regiments of Horse with me, are as many in Number as those now in London; and my four Regiments of Foot near as full as the six I remove, so that your Numbers are not lessened. In this Letter I send two Lists; in one of them the Quarters are set down for these Regiments which march with me into London; and in the other, the several Quarters of those to march out, which I did not appoint, but upon much Consideration of the present Posture of your Affairs, and intelligence of the distemper'd Condition of the Places to which I assign them. I have sent a faithful Servant of yours to receive your Commands in this Business; because on your Forces under me will be drawn to Barnet: And if on that Day those in London march out, we may supply their Places: But I humbly desire your Pleasure may be so early communicated to us, that I may send the Quarter-Masters to make provision for the men; Which is all at present from, &c.

A List of all the Quarters that were assigned the Souldiers that marched out of London upon Monk's marching in.

The General approved of the Letter, and signed it; and they agreed, that it should not be sent till he came to St. Albans; That those in the House of the Faction for the Oath of Abjuration, might suppose it came with the privacy of Scot and Robinson; and seeing him so near, be less apt to oppose his Desires. It was Midnight before thus much was Resolved; but in regard he was to march the next Morning, he resolved fully to settle the whole Affair before he went to Bed; and therefore sent for the Books of Mapps, for the better assigning the Quarters of those that were to march out. And by the Quarter-Master-General's List he disposed the Quarters of his own men. Colonel Knight was one in whom he had great Confidence, and he was sent for to assist in this Assignment of Quarters, but strictly enjoined to Secrecy.

The Regiments of Horse to march out were Ordered thus:

Okey's Regiment, To Bedford one Troop, Buckingham one Troop, Ailsbury one Troop, Peterborough one Troop, and Northampton two Troops.

Hazlerig's Regiment; To Reading one Troop, Oxford two Troops, Gloucester one Troop, Worcester one Troop, Hereford one Troop.

Ashley Cooper's Regiment; To Basingstoke one Troop, Bath one Troop, Bristol two Troops, Salisbury two Troops.

Rich's Regiment; To Ipswich one Troop, Colchester one Troop, Norwich two Troops, Bury one Troop, Yarmouth one Troop.

The Foot were disposed as followeth.

Colonel Ayres his Regiment; To Sandwich one Company, Dover two Companies, Canterbury five Companies, Rye two Companies.

Colonel Markhams Regiment; To Ipswich three Companies, to Colchester five Companies, and to Sudbury two Companies.

Colonel Streater's Regiment; To Buckingham three Companies, to Northampton five Companies, and to Newark upon Trent two Companies. The Confidence the General had of Colonel Streater, in placing his Regiment in the midst of the Kingdom, afterwards proved a good Expedient at the breaking out of Lambert.

The Regiment belonging to Fleetwood; To Hereford two Companies, to Oxford four Companies, to Worcester four Companies.

Colonel Moss's Regiment; To Cambridge five Companies, and to Ely five Companies.

Colonel Fitch's Regiment; To Chichester five Companies, and the rest to Winchester.

The disposition of those to be in London were in this Order:

The General's own Regiment of Horse in the Mews, and in the Strand.

Colonel Knights Regiment; To have four Troops in Kings-street, and Tuttle-street in Westminster, and two Troops in Holbourn.

Colonel Cloeberry's Regiment; Two Troops in Southwark, one in Bishops-gate-street, and three in Smithfield.

The General's Regiment of Foot in S. James's, and parts adjacent.

Colonel Read's Regiment in Somerset-house, the Strand, Long-Acre, Covent-Garden, and Saint Martins-lane.

Colonel Lydcott's Regiment in Thanet-house, Peter-house, and parts adjacent.

Colonel Hubblethorn's Regiment, in Holbourn, Smithfield, and parts adjacent.

Colonel Fagg's Regiment in Southwark.

Colonel Morley's Regiment in the Tower, and parts adjacent.

The next Morning the General marched towards Leicester, and he met Scot and Robinson, the Parliaments Commissioners, in the way to it, and they never parted with him till he came to London.

At Leicester the General expected to be attacked about the Oath of Abjuration, and was much troubled to think how to divert it. Clarges told him, He had a plain and a fair Answer to make to them, which was, That he heard many men of undoubted Integrity had refused the Oath; and till he came to London, to hear the Reasons on both sides; for the taking and refusing, he could not with Prudence resolve it. This Advice he followed, and succeeded in it. Scot and Robinson at their first Interview told him, That the Parliament had Ordered a Thousand Pounds a Year for ever to be settled on him, and appointed them to acquaint him with it; and to let him know the sense the Parliament had of his great Services, and that they were providing Moneys for his Souldiers, and were glad to hear of his repairing to London.

The Generals Answer concerning the Oath of Abjuration. Scot and Robinson's Message to him from the House.

The

Commissioners from the City, met the General at Harbrough.

The General was never more put to it than in this Journey to dissemble his Inclinations; For these men watched every moment of his time: At Harbrow Alderman Fowke, Alderman Vincent, and Mr. Bromsfeld, met him as Commissioners from the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Common-Council of London; and at the same time, Sir John Norris, with many of the chief Gentry of Northampton-shire, welcomed him into their County.

They propounded the re-admission of the Secluded Members.

Scot stiffly opposeth them.

The Citizens, after a Congratulatory Speech, fell upon Particulars, for the general Settlement of the Kingdom; and Mr. Bromsfeld, in a handsome free Speech, after the enumeration of the several Calamities it lay under, as the best Remedy, proposed the re-admission of the Secluded-Members, that the Parliament might be made full and free. Scot was so impatient at this, That he took the Words out of the Generals Mouth, and would not permit him to answer them. He told them, Now the Parliament had subjected the Military Power, to a due subordination to the Civil, they were free; and that having already given their Judgment in the Case of the Secluded-Members, it did not become them to insist on their re-admission. Fowke endeavoured to qualify what Bromsfeld had propounded, by saying, He conceived they were not obliged by their Instructions, to desire the Generals Mediation further, than that they might have all their own Members admitted, since it was unreasonable, that they should be Governed by a Parliament, where they had not their Representatives.

The General seems to comply with Scot and Robinson.

This Discourse, on all sides, was managed with some heat; and the General was forced to comply with Scot and Robinson, in their Extravagancies, to preserve their Opinion of him, which made the Citizens part from him somewhat unsatisfied, and so they continued, till he sent Clarges privately to give them a better understanding of his Intentions. But

Sir John Norris, and the Gentlemen of Northampton-shire, make an Address to him.

Sir John Norris, and the Northampton-shire Gentlemen, who were prepared to attend him at Northampton with an Address, were so much discouraged, that they thought to decline it, till Doctor Barrow requested Mr. Philip Howard, to advise them to proceed in their Intentions, and to assure them, That though they had not a satisfactory Answer, they might be sure it would produce a good effect. At Northampton

Several other Addressees, pleading for a Free-Parliament.

Sir John Norris delivered his Address; and as he marched to St. Albans, several of the same nature were presented to him from the Gentry of Buckingham-shire, Oxford-shire, Norfolk, and almost all Counties, which did all agree in the same matter, (viz.) For the Restitution of the Members Secluded in the Year, 1648. and the filling up the Vacancies in Parliament, or else for the calling of a full and Free-Parliament All which were answered with much respect by him, although he durst not discover his Approbation of their Desires: And it is very observable, That in all the Counties, so much Caution was observed, That no Gentlemen signed any of these Addresses, that had ever been engaged in his present Majesties, or his Royal Fathers Cause, nor scarce any of the Sons of such.

At Dunstable the General consulted Major

Knight and Clarges, about the filling up the Blanks in the Letter prepared at Nottingham, having had Thoughts to send it by Clarges, Knight, or Clark his Secretary: But upon further consideration, it was thought convenient not to part with Knight, because his presence would be requisite with his Troops, if any Disorders should happen upon their March to London; as for Clark, he was so necessary to be with the General, for the issuing out Orders that he could not be spared: and for Clarges, it was judged more expedient, that he should be sent before, to prepare a party in the House; so that Lydcott was chosen to be sent, as one very grateful to the Speaker, to whom he was near ally'd, and Friday was the Day inserted for his March into London: And upon the next Days Consultation, which was Saturday in the Evening, the 28 of January, he was dispatched away: And on Monday the Letter was delivered, which caused a long and violent Debate: Haslerig told them, the Council of State had before agreed, that four Regiments of those in London should march out, and four of the Generals be admitted; but nothing prevailed that he said against the Generals Letter: So that after Debate, from eight in the Morning, to twelve at Noon, the Result was in these words;

Monday, January 30. 1659.

Upon Reading of a Letter from St. Albans, from General Monk, Dated the 28 of January, 1659. and two Lists therein.

The House consent to the General's Desire.

Resolved upon the Question by the Parliament, That the Parliament doth agree with the Distributions of the Souldiers, according to these Lists.

Resolved upon the Question by the Parliament, That it be referred to the Commissioners of the Army, to see the Souldiers forthwith distributed accordingly.

Lydcott returns to the General with the welcome News of these Votes, as well might it be so to him; for from the moment of the execution of them (which gave him the possession of London) he could not but think his Conduct would prove very ill, if he did not reduce the Armies, in the three Kingdoms, to his Obedience.

Captain Cuff, an Agent from Sir Charles The General Coot in Ireland, had attended the General, in hath constant Intelligence of all Affairs in Ireland by means of Capt. Cuff.

all his March from Newcastle to London, and given him, from time to time, an account of all Occurrences; by which means the General kept a strict Correspondence both with him, the Lord Broghil, and several others of the chief Officers there; Who, although they had reduced all that Kingdom to the Obedience of the Parliament, were nevertheless suspected by them; and Scot insinuated to the General, That notwithstanding all their Pretences, he had good grounds to believe, they had some other Interest in their Aim, than that of the present Parliament.

The General diverted this Jealousie, with assurances of their Fidelity, and that he would undertake for them; which allay'd the Suspicion for that time, or at least so raked it up in Alhes, that no Sparks outwardly appeared.

Y y y would

A Mutiny among some of the Souldiery, that were to depart out of the City. A Rising in the City, dispersed by the Souldiers.

The Regiments that were to March from London, to give place to the General and his Regiments, had a Months Pay assigned them, to be paid at their Remove; but that did not hinder them from Mutiny at their departure, especially those that Quartered at St. James's and Somerset-House, which was not without great Industry of the Officers appeased; Upon which followed about Midnight an Insurrection in the City, where about six or seven hundred drew together, and by Beat of Drum about the Streets, invited others to joyn with them for a Free-Parliament, and the Liberty of the City, in expectation to have the Souldiers joyn with them; but two Troops of Horse suddenly dispersed most of them, and took the rest (about eight and thirty) Prisoners, which were the next Morning committed to Lambeth-House: This Insurrection, together with the Disorders of the Souldiers, so frightened the Council of State, that in the beginning of the fore-going Night, they had sent to the General to March with all haste into London; but that was afterwards contradicted, and he drew not near the Town till the Morning, and in the Afternoon, the others being all Marched out, Tumults quieted, and all both within and without in a great Calm.

Gen. Monk Marcheth with his Forces into the City of London.

He marcheth with his Army by Grays-Inn-Lane into Holbourn, and from thence down Chancery-Lane, and so through Temple-Bar, along the Strand, to White-Hall. The three Regiments of Horse marched first, and He in the Head of them gallantly Mounted, with his Trumpets richly habited before him, and several Led-Horses after him, with many of his Chief Officers, and several Persons of Honour and Quality; and after them marched the Foot. The Speaker of the House met him in the Street near Somerset-House, where they Complemented each other: After which the General marched on to White-Hall, and the Speaker went to the Rolls. As soon as the Souldiers were Quartered, and all the Guards set, the General was visited by several of the Council of State; and being invited to take his place there, he went in compliance with them: But when the Oath of Abjuration was tendred, he refused it, for the Reasons before mentioned, and was therefore not admitted, whereupon he returned to his Appartment. The next day was spent in Visits to him, from all the Members of Parliament, and many other Persons of the highest Quality. Mr. Scot told him, The Parliament did intend on Monday, publicly in their House, to give him their Acknowledgments of his Service, and that they expected he should there make publick Professions of his Affections to their Interest and Authority, and his Dislike of the Addresses to him, for the Secluded Members and a Free Parliament.

He made little Answer to him, but that he was much obliged to them, for the Honour of so great a Respect; and should endeavour by his future Services, to give Evidences of his just Resentments of it.

It is observable, That from this time, in all the Orders to him from the Parliament, they called him only Commissioner Monk, and not General: And although yet no publick Order had superseded the Commission of Commander in Chief, sent to him by the Council of State, they allowed him no Authority, but conjunct with others, whereof he took little notice, but proceeded as before in the sole Exercise of the Command of the Army. He was somewhat perplexed, how to behave himself in the Parliament, in reference to the great Professions and Protestations they expected from him, of his Aversions from the King and his Party, to balance his refusing the Oath of Abjuration: But he resolved to act in that occasion, as moderate as the Season would bear, and yet to temper his Speech so, as not altogether to fail their Expectations.

The Stile given him in their Orders, not General, but only Commissioner Monk.

On Monday, which was the sixth of February, he was brought to the Court of Wards by Scot, Robinson, and some other Members; after which, Scot acquainted the House with his being there: Whereupon the Serjeant with his Mace being sent to attend him, carried it before him, Scot and Robinson conducting him into the House to a Place on the left Hand within the Bar, where a Chair faced with Velvet was set for him to sit on.

He is conducted with much Ceremony into the House.

As soon as he had made Obeysance, the Speaker bid him sit down; but he desiring to be excused, and standing behind the Chair, the Speaker expressed himself to him in these words;

IT hath been a common Observation, that the lighter Passions have a loud Voice, but such as are of greater Magnitude are always silent. As it is in Passions, so in Actions also: Those of a lesser Dimension, are often magnified above their Measure; but Historians do commonly fail in the Expressions of Noble and Great Actions, and such are frequently lessened; and so it may well be in these of this Days Remembrance. The Infalible Author tells us, That in Judea is GOD known, and his Name is great in Israel; That Knowledge and Greatness of GOD is verified in the Instance of Martial Affairs, That the stout-hearted are spoiled, they have slept their sleep, and none of the Men of Might have found their Hands. This is verified this Day amongst Us here present; that both we and You might acknowledge, that it is GOD, not Man, that hath performed this Great work; that we his Creatures here may neither ascribe it to our wisdom, or Your Valour, but that it was GOD alone, and none else. But yet I have always observed, that albeit the Glory appertains to the LORD, yet the Influence of that Glory

The Speakers Speech to him.

He refuseth the Oath of Abjuration.

Scot instructs him how to receive the intended Gratu-lations of the House.

Glory extends it self to the Instruments in his hand; and thereby those Beams enlighten your Honour and Valour, as an especial Instrument; not as a Merit, but as a Reward upon your Prudence and wise Conduct. The knowledge of what hath been done in this our Restitution, is not unknown in these Nations; I believe, to this part of the World, how our Friends (as we conceived) left us, and what Defection hath been in Duty and Trust. The Face of this Land was covered with a Gloomy and Black Cloud, and the whole Nation left, in the judgment of man, to the uttermost of ruine: But in that condition, we did as the Prophet in the greatest misery of Israel, espy a little Cloud, no broader than a Hand, which is infinitely, in an instant, become the Refreshment of the whole Nation: That little Cloud was discerned afar off in your Hand, and by the Prudence of your wise Conduct, it dispersed the Miseries of these Nations, and became a Glorious Mercy to them all. This House hath a true Resentment of your Prudence and Conduct in this Great Work, and have Commanded Me to return their hearty Thanks: But I must not end here, for they have also a full Sense of those Noble Commanders, Officers, and Souldiers, both of their Fidelity, Valour, and Duty in this Expedition: And as I have returned to you their Thanks, so it is their Desire, that you should return the same to your Commanders, Officers, and Souldiers, who have been Instrumental in these Actions.

After he had ended, the General stood up, and spake as followeth:

Mr. speaker,

The Generals
Speech in Answer to the Speakers.

Amongst the many Mercies of God to these poor Nations, your peaceable Restitution is not the least. It is (as you said) his Work alone, and to Him belongs the Glory of it; and I esteem it as a great effect of his Goodness to me, that he was pleased to make me, amongst many Worthier in your Service, some way Instrumental in it. I did nothing but my Duty, and deserve not to receive so great an Honour and Respect as you are pleased to give me at this time and Place, which I shall ever acknowledge as a high mark of your Favour to me.

SIR, I shall not now trouble you with large Narratives, only give me leave to acquaint you, That as I marched from Scotland hither, I observed the People in most Counties in great and earnest expectations of a Settlement; and several Applications were made to me with numerous Subscriptions to them; The chiefeſt Heads of their Desires were for a Free and a Full Parliament, and that you would determine your Sitting; a Gospel-Ministry, Encouragement of Learning and Universities, and for admittance of the Members Secluded before the Year 1648: without any previous Oath or Engagement. To which I commonly answered, That you are now in a Free Parliament, and if there be any Force remaining upon you, I would endeavour to remove it; and that you had Voted to fill up your House, and then you would be a full Parliament also; And that you had already determined your Sitting: And for the Ministry, their maintenance, the Laws and Universities, you had largely declared concerning them in your last Declaration; and I was confident you would adhere to it: But as for those Gentlemen Secluded in the year 1648. I told them, you had given Judgment in it, and all People ought to acquiesce in that Judgment; but to admit any Members to sit in Parliament without a previous Oath or Engagement, to preserve the Government in being, it was never done in England.

But although I said it not to them, I must say, with pardon, to you, That the less Oaths and Engagements are imposed, (with respect had to the Security of the Common Cause) your Settlement will be the sooner attained to. I am the more particular in these matters, to let you see how grateful your present Consultations about these things will be to the People. I know all the sober Gentry will close with you, if they may be tenderly and gently used; and I am sure you will so use them, as knowing it to be the Common Concern to amplify, and not to lessen our Interest, and to be careful that neither the Cavaleer, nor Phanatick Party have yet a share in your Civil or Military Power; of the last of whose Impatience to Government, you have lately had so severe experience. I should say something of Ireland and Scotland; Indeed Ireland is in an unsettled Condition, and made worse by your Interruptions, which prevented the passing an ACT for the Settlement of the Estates of Adventurers and Souldiers;

‘diers there, which I heard you intended ‘to have done in a few days; and I pre‘sume it will be now quickly done, be‘ing so necessary at this time, when the ‘Wants of the Commonwealth call for ‘Supplies; and People will unwillingly ‘pay Taxes for those Estates of which ‘they have no legal assurance: I need ‘not tell you how much you were abu‘sed in the nomination of your Officers
 ‘of your Armies there; their malice ‘that deceived you, hath been sufficiently ‘manifested: I do affirm, That those ‘now that have declared for you, will ‘continue faithful, and thereby Evince,
 ‘that as well there as here, it is the so‘ber Interest must establish your Domi‘nion. As for Scotland, I must say, The ‘People of that Nation deserve to be ‘Cherished; and I believe your late ‘Declaration will much glad their Spi‘rits; for nothing was to them more ‘dreadful, than a fear to be over-run
 ‘with Phanatick Notions: I humbly re‘commend them to your Affection and ‘Esteem, and desire the intended Union
 ‘may be prosecuted, and their Taxes
 ‘made proportionable to those in Eng‘land, for which I am engaged by pro‘mise to become a Suiter to you. And ‘truly, Sir, I must ask leave to intreat you ‘to make a speedy Provision for the Civil ‘Government there, of which they have ‘been destitute near a Year, to the ruine
 ‘of many Families: And except Com‘missioners for managing of the Go‘vernment, and Judges to sit in Courts
 ‘of Judicature, be speedily appointed,
 ‘that Country will be very miserable.

‘I directed Mr. Gumble lately to pre‘sent some Names to you both for Com‘missioners and Judges; but by reason ‘of your great Affairs, he was not re‘quired to deliver them in Writing, but ‘I humbly present them to your Consi‘deration.

And so concluding, he delivered them the Paper wherein the said Names were contained.

His Speech excepted against by Scot, and those of his Party.

Scot and some others were much offended that he assumed so much in this Speech, and were once thinking to interrupt him. They complained to their Confidants, That he was too positive in undertaking for the Officers in Ireland, of whose Affections to the Parliament in the present Constitution of it, there was just cause of doubt; and that in the whole Speech he seemed to affect Popularity, and gave the Cavaliers a possibility of being received into the exercise of Trust, with a total Exclusion of the more strict Parliament-Party, under the Notion of Phanaticks.

But that which at this time more disquieted these men than the General's Speech, was the discontented Carriage of the City, for the Common-Council had been in very high debates about the Government, and were resolved to pay no Publick Taxes till the House were filled up with equal Representatives: This they looked upon as drawing towards a Contempt of their Authority, and thought they could not better provide for their own Securities, than by opposing in time, and punishing such Con-tumacies; they therefore on the eighth of February in the Evening at the Council of State, Order the General to go into London the next Morning with a good part of the Army, and to seize upon Eleven of the most Active of the Common-Council, and commit them to the Tower; as also to pull down the Posts and Chains, and take down the Gates and Percullices of the City, and Quarter his Souldiers there, till they were reduced to Obedience.

The City continue male-content,

The General Ordered to march into the City and pull down the Gates.

The General was surprized at this Command, and debated many things with them in mitigation or suspension of it, till near one in the Morning the next day, but nothing could divert their Resolution; so that he was forced to obey their Orders, or quit his Command, for he had no longer time to deliberate than that very Morning in which they were to be put in Execution: insomuch, that after three or four hours repose to refresh himself, he marched into the City, and pulled down the Posts and Chains, and took into Custody Nine of the Citizens which he had Orders to secure, the other two absented themselves: The Nine Imprisoned, were Mr. Lawrence Bromfield of Tower-street, Alderman Vincent, Alderman
Bludworth, Mr. Thomas Brown of Woodstreet, Mr. Daniel Spencer in Fridaystreet, Mr. Penning
 in Fan-Church-street, Mr. Jackson, Mr. Chamberlain, and Mr. Richard Ford. The City was much Alarm'd at this proceeding: And the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and several of the chiefest of the Citizens applied themselves to him to moderate his Actions. All the City indeed seemed as People confounded with Wonder and Anxiety. And Colonel Hubble-thorn, and others, the Generals own Officers, were many of them so much troubled, that they came to him to offer up their Commissions, rather than be employed in such an Action:
 They told him, The honour and respect they had to his Person engaged them never to serve against him, or dispute his Orders: But in this, since they could not without horror obey them, they with tears prayed him to dispose of their Commands to some more necessary Persons. He was moved much at these their passionate expressions, but privately informed them of his own dislike of what was Commanded; and therefore Conjured them to continue their Confidence in him, and execute what he had given them in Charge, as that from which better effects would ensue than was convenient at that time to be explained. With this they went away somewhat

somewhat better contented, though not fully satisfied. He took his Quarter at the Three Tuns in Guild-Hall-Yard, where, notwithstanding this Accident, he received with much Civility those which came to him: Among whom, one Mr. Jolly, a discreet Citizen, with modesty and temper represented to him the Inconveniences of what he had undertaken, and told him, The Affections of the City to him were such, that whatever he reasonably could desire of them, should be easier obtained by Perswasion than Force. That the Controversie between Enemies had nothing in it extraordinary; but to be ill Treated by Friends was very grievous. When Hewson marched into the City with a greater Number, he could not compass his Ends, but received Opposition with Contumelies and Affronts both to his Person and Party: But when he came, a general Calm and Kindness was seen in the Countenances of the People; And now that he had put his most rigorous Orders in Execution, they seemed rather amazed with Astonishment to receive it from his hand, than provoked to resent the Indignity of it.

The General
writes to the House to mitigate their Commands.

This Prudent Speech made great impression on him, insomuch, that he told them thereupon, That he had Orders to take down the Gates and Percullices as well as the Posts and Chains, but he would immediately write to the Parliament to mitigate their Commands. And accordingly he writ to acquaint them, That he had secured all the Persons given him in charge to Imprison, except two that were absent; And that the next Morning the Lord Mayor and Aldermen had appointed a Meeting of the Common Council, where they doubted not that all things would be composed to their satisfaction, and the Assessments be paid, (which was the chiefest cause of his March into London) so that thereupon he had forbore to meddle with the Gates and Percullices, till he should receive further Orders, because such severe acting would highly incense the City, and he hoped by mild means to reduce them to reason. This Letter made them higher than before; for whereas in their former Orders they had appointed him only to unhinge the Gates, and pull down the Percullices, they now Command him to destroy both Gates and Percullices: And to prevent the meeting of the Common Council, they ordered, That the present Common Council of the City should be dissolved; and declared them null and void. And without any other Answer, they sent these Votes to the General.

They so much the more stirred up, send more rigorous Orders than before.

Upon this return, he was not a little perplexed in Mind, and very thoughtful what to do; but at last he resolved fully to execute his Orders, that the House might not take occasion from his dispute of them, in the unsettled condition of the Souldiers, to vacate his Commission, and thereupon commanded his Souldiers to break all the Gates and Percullices in pieces. Which done, on Friday in the Evening he came back to White-Hall; but at his return, Scot and Haslerig, and some others of their Violent Friends were very much moved, as if he had disobeyed his Orders, by which they said he was to continue with his Army in the City, till several Designs of theirs for the further humbling them to their purposes should be effected; and there was a Whisper, as if he were to have been questioned for it. It was also artificially contrived, that the same day the Gates were pulled down, a Petition from a Factious Phanatick Party of Citizens was presented by one Praise-God Barebone to the House, to countenance the Action, and to press an Oath of Renunciation to be taken by all that should be employed in Civil and Military Affairs: Nevertheless, to please the Lord Mayor and Aldermen, they had the Thanks of the House for their Moderation in this time of disorder in the City.

of the City.

That Evening Clarges privately went to the General, and represented to him the ill Consequences of his Proceedings in London; And that the Influence that City had by Commerce, and other occasions, all over England, would quickly diffuse the Infamy of the Fact: And all the Cities and Towns would be alarm'd, believing if that Great City should be made a Village, all their Franchises and Priviledges would be quickly subverted. So that he had no way to redeem his Reputation, but the very next Morning to return into the City with his Army, and declare for a Free Parliament.

The General, though he demurred a little upon this Counsel, yet he seemed very sensible of the Contempts they at Westminster had put upon him in the whole Progress of this Affair, and was resolved after a day or two's private Consultation with some of his Officers, to do something to regain their Esteem he had lost; for the performance of which, he said, He would take time but till Tuesday Morning. This was the effect of their first Discourse. But a while after, Dr. Barrow came to Clarges, ear- nestly urging him to renew his Advice to the General, setting forth, *That delay might give his Enemies time to put out of his power the doing what he intended; And that it was most necessary to be speedy in the retrieving the good Opinion of the City, to manifest thereby the greater dislike of what he had done the day before, as that to which the necessity of the time (against his own Inclination) pressed him to. Whilst they were in this Discourse, two Officers of the Army, in whom the General then had much Trust, came in to them, and they all together went to him again, and, with the same Arguments reiterated, dissuaded from delay; adding, That they had certain Intelligence, that the Council of State began to be jealous of him, for that little Favour he shewed to the City in the execution of his Orders, and that he ought therefore in Prudence to provide for his own Safety. Barrow was appointed to gain what Intelligence he could against the next Morning; and the General with Clarges, Thompson, Sanders, and Barton, which two last were advised with as two Officers that very much inclined to Admission of the Secluded Members, consulted what to offer to the House as a ground for their March into London: At last, waving all thought of making any excuse for marching into the City, they conclude, That Orders should be privately issued for about a dozen of the Chief Officers, in whom he had greatest confidence, to meet at Six the next Morning at the General's Quarters, and for*

for the drawing of some men together before White-Hall, to be ready to March; And that a Letter should be sent to the House in the Morning signed by the General and a Select number of Military Officers, to complain of many Irregularities committed by them: Amongst others,

The Substance of his Letter to the House.

That they gave too much Countenance to Lambert, Vane, and several that Ingaged with the late Committee of Safety; And that they had permitted Ludlow, and some others, to Sit in their House, that had been by Sir Charles Coot, and some of the Irish Officers, accused of High-Treason; and had Countenanced too much a late Petition, to exclude the most Sober and Conscientious, both Ministers and others, by Oaths, from all Employment and Maintenance: And in conclusion, to request, That by Friday next they should issue out Writs to fill up their House; and when filled, should rise at their appointed time, to give place to a Full and Free Parliament.

The Letter being signed by the General, and several Officers, is sent by Cloberry, and Lydcott.

The General having sent Clarges before to the Lord Mayor, marches to Finsbury.

Clarges finding my Lord Mayor distrustful, applies himself to Alderman Robinson.

The General having agreed to these Heads, retired to his repose, whilst the rest penned the Letter, which he directed to be drawn in his Name, and in the name of the rest of the Officers of the Army. The next day the Officers, who had been sent for to meet at White-Hall, repairing thither early in the Morning, the Letter was produced, and read to them; (the General being present) and by all of them approved of; whereupon the General Signed it, and with him several Colonels; (viz.) Saunders, Read, Lydcott, Knight, Cloberry, Redman and Hubblethorn, one Lieutenant Colonel, which was Ethelbert Morgan, who Commanded the General's own Regiment of Foot, and six Majors, Johnson, Barton, Smith, Bannister, Pryme, and Nicholls; Cloberry and Lydcott were sent with the Letter to the House, and Clarges at the same time was sent to my Lord Mayor, to acquaint him with the General's Intentions to come and Quarter his Army that Night in the City, and to dispose him and the City to give him a favourable Reception.

These things thus ordered, the General immediately marched away to Finsbury, where he drew up his Souldiers, till he should hear from Clarges how the City would receive him: Who finding my Lord Mayor very reserved, and averle to the General's coming, asterrified with his Actions the day before, had applied himself to Alderman Robinson, and some others that he durst trust, and acquainted them privately, that the General's coming was for good to the City and Kingdom; but did not instance in the Particulars of what was in agitation, having had Orders to conceal that, till it was known how they at Westminster should receive the Letter: Nevertheless, Robinson sends for two or three Aldermen of his Confidents, and with these they go to the Lord Mayor to mollifie him, but without any effect for the present: Nevertheless, Clarges told him, the General was resolved, though he Quartered not in the City, at least to be his Guest at Dinner: And accordingly he sent to the General, to desire him to march with all his Men to Leaden-Hall-street, to the Lord Mayor's Door, which he immediately did. While matters were thus carried on in the City, the House was in great Disorder at the reading of the General's Letter; but they temporized so far, as to shew no publick distaste at it; but Ordered,

That the Thanks of the House should be given to the General for his Faithful Service in securing of the City; and that, as to filling up the House, the Parliament were upon Qualifications before the Receipt of his Letter, and the same should be dispatched in due time; and that Mr. Scot, and Mr. Robinson should attend him with their Votes, in Answer to his Letter.

The House dissemble their Resentment of the General's Letter, and give him good words.

As soon as the General came to the Lord Mayor, he told him, He was very welcom to his House, but that the City was full of Fears and sad Apprehensions of his sudden Return, after such violent Actions as the day before his Souldiers had been employed in. The General told him, He hoped to make them of another mind in few hours. Yet was he inwardly somewhat troubled, not knowing what hindrance this Coldness he found might give to his Designs; insomuch, that he called Clarges aside, and checkt him, as one who had over-hastily pressed him on, upon so little time of consideration, to so great an Enterprize. To which he answered, That he was now too far advanced to go back; and that the best Advice he could give him was, to desire the Lord Mayor presently to appoint the Aldermen and Common-Council to meet him at four a Clock at Guild-Hall, and there to acquaint them with his real Intentions, to comply with the Desires of the whole Kingdom.

This Motion pleasing, and the said Request being accordingly made to the Lord Mayor, Orders were immediately sent out: but in the mean time, Scot and Robinson came to him from them at Westminster, with the before-mentioned Answer to the Letter.

Requests the calling of a Common-Council. Scot and Robinson sent from the House to the General, with their Answer to his Letter.

Bridges, an Officer of Ireland, that stood by, told them, The General had no reason to credit their fair Speeches, since their words and their practices agreed not together, as was manifest in their Contempt of those his Friends in Ireland, who for his sake hazarded themselves in their Service; And now when he came from the Irish Army to Impeach Ludlow and Jones of High-Treason, he could have no Justice, but was put off from day to day, when Praise-God Barebone could be heard, and admitted with a Seditious Petition the first moment he came to the Door of the House. And Cloberry told them, The General and all his Officers could not but perceive that they grew Jealous of them, and that they went about to Balance them with such as had been their Enemies, which made it high-time for them to consult for their own safeties.

Bridges and Cloberry sharply upbraids them.

The General closed all with Moderation, telling them, All would be well, if they strictly observed the Advice of the Letter, and issued out Writs on Friday next for filling up their House.

With

An Act for constituting five Commissioners for the Government of the Army.

With this Answer they returned to their Fellow Members, not very well satisfied, as was evident by what they did that very Afternoon in the House; for they passed an Act to divide the Government of the Army among five Commissioners; Namely, General Monk, Sir Arthur Haslerig, the Colonels, Morley, Walton, and Alured, and made the Quorum of them to be three.

This was opposed by many of the General's Friends, but they were not enough to hinder its Progress; at last, for an Expedient, it was moved, That General Monk should always be one of three for Quorum: But upon putting the Question, 'twas carried in the Negative. When word was brought him of this their Ingratitude to him, he could not avoid expressing much Indignation at it.

The Lord Mayor and Common-Council, being met at Guild Hall about five of the clock, the General told them,

The General excuseth his late Proceeding in the City, before the Common-Council.

That the Employment whercon he was sent, at his last being in the City, was the most ingrateful to him that ever he undertook, and so much against his Inclination, that if any thing less than quitting his Command, could have prevented it, he had never accepted such Employment; nor did he value his Commission, out of any respect to himself, for he had often desired to lay it down; but as knowing how much it imported both him and them, to keep it out of the Hands of such as most probably would not be so well inclined as He, to the Settlement of these Nations; That what he had now to tell them, was, That he had that Morning sent to the Parliament, to issue out Writs within seven days, for the filling up of their House; and when filled, to sit no longer than till the sixth of May, to give then Place to a full and a free Parliament.

The City joyfully receives the News of a Free-Parliament.

The News of this was quickly dispers'd through all the City, and received with great Demonstrations of Joy, expressed in Bone-fires, and Ringing of Bells.

After this, he retired for some time to a house in Cheap-side, to give order for the Quartering of his Souldiers, and went himself to Lodg at the Glass-house in Broad-street, till Drapers-Hall could be accommodated for his Reception.

The Monday after his stay in the City, the Council of State writ to him, To desire his Presence with them, to assist with his Counsels, in the carrying on the great Affairs of the Nation.

To which he the next day returned Answer.

The General's Answer to the Council of State, inviting him to come and sit with them.

That till the Oath should be taken away, which put a bar to him, and many others, from acting as Counsellors, his Presence could not be useful to them there: And withal, he informed them, That the Distractions of the City were increased by the continuance of Arms in the Hands of the Phanaticks, and Persons disaffected to the Parliament, who had 7000 lately out of the Stores delivered to them, and were providing more: Wherefore he desired them immediately to recal these Arms; and withal, to excuse his stay in the City for some longer time, till the minds of the Citizens were composed.

The Mayor and Aldermen of the City, and the Chief of the Officers (hearing how earnest the Parliament was to draw him again to White-Hall) importuned his Continuance in the City; and to induce him to it, they assure him, it cannot be safe for him, or them, that he remove; for that they had certain Information, That many private Letters were sent from Haslerig, and others, to withdraw the Affections of the Souldiery from him, and that certain men were employed to several Regiments to debauch them. This Information had been enough to induce the General, had he not been resolved before: So that when Colonel Allured came from the Council of State, to perswade him against staying in the City, he acquainted him with what he heard. Allured laboured to infuse a Belief in him, of his having been mis-informed in those things. It was answered by the General, That he put no greater stress on those Reports, than to be vigilant over the Actions and Motions of the several Parties, deferring the belief of them, till time should evince the truth. But he assured him, He was advertized from Persons of good Fame, That notwithstanding that Lambert was proscribed, and Vane put out of this Parliament, and ordered to leave the Town; yet the stay of the latter was connived at, and Sir Arthur Haslerig, and several others, corresponded with them both.

The City, and chief Officers of his Army, dissuade him from hearkning to the Parliaments Invitations, to return back to White-Hall.

Col. Allured solicits his return in vain.

Sir Arthur Haslerig writ many Expostulatory Letters, to free himself of these Imputations, but could not sufficiently clear himself of them. And now by more frequent Addresses than ever, the General is from all Counties solicited to the admission of the Secluded Members, which he only delayed, because the Army was not yet in a Temper for it; but to prepare them he received Visits from some of the Secluded Members, where they were always admitted, to hear by their Discourses, how well they were inclined to the Settlement of the Peace of the Nations. In this Method he so far proceeded, as on the 18th. of February, to have a Conference before him, of some of the Secluded Members, and some of the others. Those of the Sitting Members, were, St. John, Haslerig, Morley, Thomson, Ashley-Cooper, Weaver, White, Feild-der, Hutchinson, and Rawleigh; but Scot and Reynolds also were intended by the General to be there, but for want of some Notice they came not. The Secluded Members that met them, were, Sir William Lewis, Sir John Evelin, Sir John Holland, Sir Gilbert Gerard, Colonel Pop-ham, Mr. Annesly, Mr. Knightly, Mr. Crew, Mr. Trevor, Colonel Harley, Colonel Norton, Sir John Temple, and Colonel Birch. They discoursed of many things, in order to a mutual Accord, for the Peace and Welfare of the Nations, but came to no Conclusion; because the sitting Members durst not undertake for the rest of the House, without their consent, which could not be known but by Vote: Yet severally all of them, who were then present, seem'd well satisfied with that moderation and temper, which they found in those Gentlemen with whom they conferred.

The General is importuned from all Parts to admit the Secluded Members.

He admits of a Conference before him, of the Sitting Members, with some of the Secluded.

The General was fully bent to promote their Admission so far, that if it could not be done by by Common Consent, he Resolved to admit them without it.

The Officers of the Army consent to the admission of the Secluded, upon certain Conditions.

Mr. Clarges and others, appointed to Treat with some of the Secluded concerning the safe Conditions.

The Officers of the Army were consulted with, and they were willing enough to have them sit, on condition they would promise to Declare for a Common-Wealth Government, and pass an Act for the Confirmation of the Possession of their Lands, disposed of since their Seclusion, and to agree upon a short time for their Dissolution. Wherefore, to try how far they were inclined, to admit of those Conditions, Mr. Clarges, Colonel Cloberry, and Doctor Gumble, were appointed to Treat with some of them, who when they met, had many Discourses of the whole Matter.

The Secluded Members Declared, as to Government, they intended no alteration in it, or to Act further than in preparation for a Parliament to succeed them; and since there was no other way for their Summons, but by Writs, in the Name of the Keepers of the Liberty of England, by Authority of Parliament, they saw not how there could be by that Constitution any other Government introduced. As to Confirmation of Sales, and Dispositions of Lands, they said, they had been all made since the Seclusion, and they would not alter them, but rather mediate with the next Parliament, to pass an Act for their Confirmation; and for the time of their sitting, They were contented it should determine in a Moneths time. Cloberry urged the great Insecurity the Army and many of their Friends would be in, if their Publick Lands were not confirmed, which was the price of their Blood; and though their not disturbing such Possessions in England, might be a little Satisfaction, yet the whole Nation of Ireland was unsettled, both as to Adventurers and Souldiers. To this it was Replyed, That they should not think themselves in a Capacity to pass any Acts at all, as being but one House; and to prevent all Jealousie of their Actions, they would consent to be Limited to the Chief Heads of what they should consult, during the short time of their Continuance.

The Consultations upon what the Members had delivered of their Intentions.

When the Conference ended, Report was made of the Substance of it to the General, and the rest of the Chief Officers, who approved of every thing proposed by the Secluded Members, except the not Confirmation of Publick Dispositions of Lands, and their refusing to pass any Acts of Parliament: As to that of Lands, which they would not be drawn to confirm, Clarges told the Officers, they could not answer it to the Kingdom, to break with them for that Consideration, thereby to obstruct the Settlement of it, out of respect to their own private Interests; he said, The greatest part of his own Estate was in Ireland, and that it was acknowledged by all, the greatest Insecurity of Publick Estates was in that Kingdom: yet he would for his own part submit all his Concerns to the Determination of the next Parliament; rather than by opposing the Admission of these Gentlemen, contribute to the hazard of the Publick Peace. And as to that of Publick Acts, he told them, He doubted not, but they would alter their Opinions, because no Money could be raised, to supply the Necessities of the Government; nor could their own Dissolution be, but by an Act.

The General, upon hearing this, seemed very much satisfied; upon which, all the rest assented. And it was agreed, That the Secluded Members, that were in Town, should, before their Admission, sign a Paper, to consent to confine their Consultations, chiefly to the four Heads following;

1. To the settling the Conduct of the Armies, in the Three Nations, as might be most serviceable to the Peace of the Nations.

The General and the Officers agree upon admitting the Secluded Members.

The Chief Heads recommended to their Consultations.

2. For the providing Maintenance for the Forces by Sea and Land, and Money for their Arrears, and the Contingencies of Government.

3. To the appointing a Council of State to settle the Civil Government and Judicatures in Scotland and Ireland, and to take care for the Issuing of Writs for the Summoning of a Parliament to meet at Westminster the 20th. of April.

4. To their own Legal Dissolution.

This Subscription was willingly made, and on Tuesday following in the Morning, the General gave them a meeting at White-Hall; Whence, after a short Speech to recommend to them the Settlement of the Nations, with assurance, That he would impose nothing on them; they went to take their Places in the Parliament: being conducted thither by Captain Miller who Commanded the Guards.

The General meets them at White-Hall, in order to their Admission into the House.

As soon as the Members were gone, the General Summoned all the Officers of the Army together that were then in and about London, to consider of a Letter to be sent to all the Regiments in England, Scotland and Ireland, to have their Concurrence to what had been done concerning the Admission of the Secluded Members; which was referred to a Committee to be drawn up, with special Directions to satisfy them, That nothing was intended for alteration of Government, but that it should continue as a Free-State and Common-Wealth: This he did, in regard he knew it impossible, as affairs stood, to keep the Army in Temper any other way. The Letter was in a little time prepared, and so many Clerks were employed, that Copies of it were that Night Signed and dispersed to all the Regiments and Garrisons in England, and to the Commanders in Chief of the Armies in England, Scotland, and Ireland. It was penn'd in these Words;

Dear Brethren and Fellow-Souldiers.

YOU cannot be Ignorant of the many Endeavours, and earnest Desires of many good Men in these Nations to bring Us to a Settlement; which it hath pleased God to disappoint unto this Day, and leave Us as a broken and divided People, ready to run into Blood and Confusion: Which that We might prevent so great Calamities impending,

The Generals Letter to all the Regiments, to acquaint them with what he had done,

after

after our earnest seeking to God for his Direction and Assistance, We find no Expedient so likely for the satisfaction of the Good People, and the Quiet and Welfare of this Common-Wealth, as the re-admission of the Secluded Members, in order to a Legal Dissolution of this Parliament by their own free Consent, and to Issue Writs for a future full Representative of the whole Common-Wealth of England, Scotland and Ireland, under such Qualifications as may secure our Cause, to Convene on the twentieth day of April next at Westminster, for the establishing of this Common-Wealth upon the Foundations of Justice and true Freedom. And to take away all just Jealousies from you, We do assure you, That We shall joy with you in the maintenance of those Ends, and do expect your Chearful Concurrence with Us; having no intentions or purposes to return to our old Bondage; But since the Providence of God hath made Us free at the cost of so much Blood, we hope we shall never be found so unfaithful to God and his People, as to lose so glorious a Cause; but We do resolve with the Assistance of God, to adhere to you in the continuing of our dear-purchased Liberties, both Spiritual and Civil. The reason of Our proceeding in this manner may seem strange, but if you duly consider the necessities of our Affairs and the present state of things, you will certainly conclude nothing so safe to secure Publick Interest, and to engage the Nations peaceably to submit to a Free-State; most of the said Members having given us full assurance, that their Session in Parliament shall be no longer than absolute necessity will require, to the putting the Government into Successive Parliaments, they not being free so to Act by the old Writs as when they shall be called upon a Common-Wealth account: And it is the Opinion of the truest Friends to a Free-State, That it cannot be consistent with the perpetual Sitting of these Members, being contrary to the nature of such a Government.

And as We are confident the present Parliament now Sitting, will not Repeal any of the Acts, Ordinances, or Orders of this present Parliament, for Sales, or publick Dispositions of Lands; so We shall in our Station observe, and cause to be observed all other Acts and Ordinances of this Parliament, whatsoever, and humbly interpose with the next succeeding Parliament, not only to pass a further ACT of Confirmation of all such Sales and Dispositions of Lands, here and in Scotland, but also of the Distributions and Dispositions of Lands and Houses in Ireland to the Souldiery, Adventurers, or any other Persons, made by or in pursuance of any of the Acts, Ordinances, or Orders of this present Parliament, or any pretended Parliamentary Authority. And We intreat you to send up an Officer to give to the Lord General Monk an account of your Acquiescence with Us herein.

And if any disaffected persons shall take occasion to make disturbance of the Peace of the Common-Wealth, either in favour of Charles Stuart, or any other pretended Authority, We desire you to secure them till the pleasure of the Parliament or Council of State be known in that behalf. You shall speedily receive Encouragement and Supplies of Money; and indeed it was not the least Motive to induce Us to this way of Composure of Affairs, that we might facilitate the raising of Moneys for the subsistence of the Army and Navy; which would not otherwise have been done (if at all) but with effusion of Blood. We have nothing more at this time, but to assure you that we shall ever remain,

These

These Transactions were managed with so much Secrefie, that the Members that were sitting in the House knew nothing of them, till they saw the Secluded Members come in and sit amongst them. Upon which they being surpris'd, were at first at a demur among themselves, whether they should keep their Seats, or quit the House; till at length the grand Sticklers of them for a Common-wealth, well knowing that it would not be in their power by staying, to make their Interest good against those who were now the major Party of the House, resolv'd, since they could not hinder them the partial possession thereof, to resign it intire unto them, while those of them that were the most moderate and well inclined staid behind, and took their Seats amongst the new admitted Members: Who in the first place applied themselves to vindicate the Honour of their House, as far as in them lay, by nullifying and expunging out of the Journals all Votes whereby they were disabled from sitting as Members therein. Next, They order Mr. Vincent and Mr. Bromfield, and the rest of those Citizens which were committed by the Council of States Orders, when the City Gates were broken, to be released; as also all others who were any where Imprisoned upon Sir George Booth's Rising, or for making Addresses for the Admission of the Secluded Members: Moreover, they Constituted General Monk by A.C.T. of Parliament, Captain General of all the Armies of England, Scotland, and Ireland, and repealed that ACT which made him only a Joynt-Commissioner with Colonel Morley, Hastlerig, Walton, and Allured, for Government of the Army.

Some there were of these restored Members, who at the first admission, could not well be present, by reason of their far distant Habitations; of which number was Mr. William Morrice, whom Mr. Nicholas Monk, the General's Brother, knowing him to be a Prudent Person, and well disposed for his Prince's Service, and the good of his Country, writ to Clarges to put the General in mind of sending for him, that being near him, he might be assistant to him in his Counsels: To this the General was easily perswaded, having had long before by his Brothers report of him, a good Opinion of his Abilities and Worth; and the rather, for that by his Wife he was somewhat allied to him. Clarges acquainted Mr. Nicholas Monk with what he had done, and inclosed a Letter from the General to Mr. Morrice, to acquaint him with his admission of the Secluded Members, and to desire him to repair to the Parliament: Where he arriv'd whilst they were sitting, and took his place in the House; wherein he appeared a most useful Instrument by his great Abilities, in Promoting and carrying on of the General's Affairs in relation to his Majesties Interest.

The Parliament repealed the ACT for the former Council of State, and the Oath of Abjuration, and passed an ACT for another Council to consist of one and Thirty Persons: A new Council of State chosen.

Which were,

General George Monk,

Colonel Rossiter, Richardly Knightly, Esquire, Colonel Popham,
Colonel Morley,

Sir John Holland,
Sir John Potts,
Colonel John Birch,
Sir Harbottle Grimstone,
John Swinfin, Esquire,
John Weaver, Esquire, Serjeant Maynard.

Most of them Men of Integrity, and well affected to Kingly Government.

The General hearing that Colonel Rich was about St. Edmonds-Bury, and having actually debauch'd two Troops, was endeavouring to corrupt the rest of his Regiment, he sent the Life-Guard to reduce them, and gave a Commission to Colonel Ingoldsby to Command the Regiment.

The Life-Guard had been lately in defection with the rest of the Troops under Lambert, and had not been mustered since the Restoration of the Parliament, nor had hitherto any Commander in Chief. And therefore the General thought fit at this time to model that Troop, and to give the Command thereof to Captain Philip Howard, making Mr. Robert Harley his Lieutenant, and his Kinsman Mr. Henry Monk, Cornet; who were so Active, that in six hours time they displaced all of whom they had any suspicion, and filled up the Troop with honest and gallant men; who immediately Marched towards Suffolk, to execute the General's Orders upon Colonel Rich; but he having Notice of the Marching of that Party towards him, retired privately, and the the Regiment quietly received Col. Ingoldsby to Command them, who by the General's appointment put out all such Officers as were of froward and seditious Principles in Religion or Government.

The General takes care for the settling of North-Wales.

And to reduce North-Wales to a more settled condition, than it was in at that present; the General gave Colonel Carter a Commission to be Governour of Beau-morris Castle, (the Souldiers whereof had been placed there by Colonel John Jones) with Authority to raise Forces to reduce Denbigh and Conway, which had been in very ill hands, and to settle that Country in quiet: which he did in a very short time, to the great satisfaction of all the Gentry and people in those parts.

How far did he make Governour of Carlisle.

The late Commonwealth-Parliament before the admission of the Secluded Members, had given Desborow's Regiment to Colonel Walton; but the General disposed of it to Colonel Charles Howard of Naworth, whom he also made Governour of Carlisle.

The Parliament levy a new Tax, and proceed to the settlement of the Militia.

The Parliament passed an Act of Assessment for a Hundred Thousand Pounds a Month for Six Months, and proceeded with much haste to settle the Militia both in the City and all other parts of England and Wales, having vacated the former ACT made before their admission, because most of the Commissioners and Officers all over England, were of Persons of suspected Inclinations to the Government.

They Command all Officers and Souldiers to repair to their several Commands and Quarters.

There being at this time an unusual Confluence of Officers of the Army in London, and some Troops and Companies drawing together in several Parts of the Kingdom; The Parliament by Proclamation Commanded all Officers to repair to their respective Charges; and not to depart from thence without special Order from the Lord General: And that all such Troops and Companies as had removed from their Quarters without the Lord General's Licence, should return forthwith to their last Quarters formerly Assigned, or to such others as should be Assigned them by directions from the Lord General.

But notwithstanding all this Care in the Parliament, Colonel Overton was designing to make Disturbances in York-shire; He drew up a Letter to Colonel Fairfax, Colonel Bethell, and Colonel Smithson, which he caused to be Subscribed by all his Officers; And therein signified to them;

A Letter of Col. Overton and the Officers with him, to some of General Monk's Officers.

That having received intimation from private hands, That the abandoned Interest of Charles Stuart doth seem so to shine in the face of Publick Transactions, that many Jealousies and Dissatisfactions were created amongst their Brethren in the Army, who remained faithful to the true Cause they had contended for, insomuch, that (as it was represented to them) several Regiments had declared their disconcurrence with these present Distractions, and their Resolutions in adhering to the Cause God had determined with Victory against all Monarchical Interests, they could not but judge it incumbent upon them to wake in such a time, and to endeavour to be found in the discharge of that Duty which their Instruments commanded from them; wherein as on the one hand they were unwilling to appear precipitate in their proceedings, so on the other they were afraid to fall short of a timely interposing of their Assistance against that old Bondage which was likely to break in anew upon them: And therefore they thought fit to expedite that Intimation unto them, and desire to understand as well what was their sense; as what was signified or imparted to them: That as they were equally engaged and concerned in one Publick Cause, so they might (if occasion required) be as conjunctively abetting and assisting to the defence of it; which through the Assistance of God they were resolved to assert and maintain (as the fruits of their Blood, the Nations Treasure, and the Prayers of the People of God) against any design whatsoever which threatened the ruine of their Civil and Religious Rights.

Many Copies of this Letter were dispersed amongst the Souldiers before the Original was sent, and an Attestation added in these words, This is Overton's and the Officers of the Garrison of Hulls Letter: And it is hoped, will meet with the Concurrence of all our honest Fellow-Souldiers; who have been engaged in the Good Old Cause against the Interest of a King and Single Person.

If Colonel Fairfax, Smithson, and Bethell had not been very Active, this practice had perverted many Souldiers, but they were vigilant to prevent it. Upon knowledge of this Letter, the General writ to Overton by Colonel Allured and Major Smith, to give him Satisfaction in his proceedings here; and the Council of State upon his Motion did the like. Major Smith was well known and beloved in Hull, and, the General having a Design to Remove Overton, he was privately to deal with some Officers and Souldiers under him who loved him not, to bring him to Reason, if upon Orders for his Remove, he should be disobedient to them; And as soon as they were gone, he sent private Orders to Colonel Fairfax (to whom he gave a Commission to be Governour of Hull) to draw some Companies to Beverly, and Writ to Overton to repair immediately to him; his Letter was sent to Colonel Fairfax open, that he might see the Import of it. The Letter was in the following Words:

The General sends Col. Fairfax to take possession of Hull.

SIR,

S. I. R,

The Generals
Letter to Colonel Overton.

I Have seen a Letter from you, and some others at Hull, dated from that Garrison on the 28 of February last, and directed to Colonel Fairfax, Colonel Bethell, and Colonel Smithson; wherein you complain of the present Transactions of the Publick Affairs, as if they tended to the bringing in of the King, and a Monarchical Bondage, which (you write) seems very likely to break in anew upon us, and threatens the ruine of our Civil and Religious Rights: All which, you say, is derived to you from private hands, which do not only insinuate their private Jealousies, but inform you that several Regiments have declared their disconcurrence with the present Transactions. I must confess, I am a little surprized at this your Letter, and manner of Proceedings, having so lately sent to you from my Self, and the greatest part of the Officers of the Army, a full Account of the Necessities that induced us, to consent to the return of the Secluded Members to the exercise of their Trust; and our Resolutions to that Cause we have so long contended for, and to the Parliament in the prosecution of it: And (notwithstanding the Information you pretend to have received, I cannot in my own observation discern any Grounds for such Apprehensions of Affairs here as you seem to entertain: nor has there appeared a discontent in any one Regiment of the Army, except part of Colonel Rich's Regiment, which is since reduced: wherefore (although you pretend not to be too precipitate in your proceedings) your dispersing Copies of your Letter before you sent it, may reasonably make me judge otherwise: And if you prosecute the matter further, I cannot but interpret your Action as tending to divide the Army, by withdrawing their Obedience from the Parliament, and consequently to involve the Nations in a new and bloody War. So that to avoid all occasions of this nature, I desire that within twenty four hours after this Letter comes to your hands, you set forward from Hull towards London, to give me an account of the present posture of that Garrison; And that within six hours after this comes to you, you signify to Colonel Fairfax, and Colonel Bethell, your Compliance herein, and the Day wherein you intend to begin your Journey, and be with me here, where I shall expect you within a Week after your departure from Hull. I have written to Colonel Fairfax more particularly concerning the Peace and Safety of the Northern parts, and of the Garrison of Hull; and if he communicates any Orders from me to you, I expect your obedience to them:

Yours,

GEORGE MONK.

Colonel Overton was surprized at the receipt of this Letter; but finding himself in no capacity to dispute the Order for his delivery up of Hull, he submitted to it; and sent to Colonel Fairfax to acquaint him with that his resolution; and himself at Eleven of the Clock, the same Night, began his Journey towards London to the General.

The Colonel submits to the General's Orders.

The General about the same time gave his Commission to Mr. Clarges to be Commissary-General of the Musters of England, Scotland, and Ireland; and to Mr. Morrice, to be Governor of Weymouth; and to Major-General Morgan, to be Commander in Chief of the Army in Scotland.

Morgan was already upon the place, but wanted sufficient Authority, till he had this Commission sent to him; and all the Army there submitted to the General's Actions in reference to the Secluded Members, except a Company in Garrison in the Isle of Orkney, commanded by one Watson, which was reduced by Captain Man, and Watson, and his Officers imprisoned; and his Company disbanded.

The Army in Scotland well satisfied with the General's Actions.

Many private Overtures were made to the General by some of the Peers that sat in the Lords House a little before the death of the late King, to be admitted to Sit; but he thought it inconvenient and hazardous, in regard the Army was already so Jealous upon the Sitting of the Secluded Members, that he had difficulty enough to moderate them. Yet at the Request of the Earl of ... he sent Commissary-General Clarges to confer with him.

The Earl told him, The Sitting of the Lords A Conference would be very advantageous to the good of the Kingdom, and to the Souldiers in particular; for that they would joyn in an ACT for the Confirmation of their Estates: And if it should be thought convenient for the good of the Kingdom to receive the King, he could not upon any Conditions with so much safety be restored, as such as should be made by Act of Parliament.

between Commissary Clar- ges and a Peer of the Land, about the Sitting of the Lords House.

To this Clarges replied, That the General was very well satisfied, that the Parliament was Dissolved by the Death of the late King; and that the present Sitting of the Members, was a Constitution rather taken up upon Necessity, than Right, which was but to make way for another Parliament; That one great Argument for the Admission of the Secluded Members, was their Consent to a quick Dissolution; which could not be, if the Lords should Sit: For they would then think themselves invested in that perpetuity which some fancy is of right in this Parliament still. But that which was most convincing, was, That the Army was not yet in temper for it.

Every

Every Post brought the General Addresses from all the Regiments in England, of their consent to his Actings: And Sir Charles Coot in Ireland had with many other Officers, upon the same day that the Secluded Members were admitted, declared at Dublin for them, and had secured Sir Hardress Waller, that had dissented from him.

An Act proposed for the settling of Hampton-Court upon the General.

Those of the former Members who staid in the House after the admission of the Secluded Members, that they might ingage the General against the King, promoted an ACT for the settling of Hampton-Court, with all the Parks and some other Lands upon him and his Heirs for ever; which so troubled him, that he used all the Friends he had to divert it; and at last an Expedient was found out, by giving him by Act of Parliament, a Present of twenty thousand pounds in Money, and the Custody or Stewardship of that House, and the Parks for his life: They also conferred upon Commissary Clarges the Hamper-Office; and about the 13th of March they Ordered, That the Engagement, appointed to be taken by each Member of Parliament, in these words, (viz.) I do declare and promise, that I will be true and faithful to the Commonwealth of England, as the same is now established without King or House of Lords, should be taken off the File, and made null.

The Engagement abrogated.

Scot, Haslerig, and some others, (whose names we shall forbear to mention, because they are yet living, and have repented of the rashness of their former proceedings) were much alarm'd at this proceeding, which they took to be an inevitable Prognostick of introducing the King; and though they so much affected Power, as to endure no Rivals in it, they chose rather to have the General take the Dominion of the Three Kingdoms upon himself, than to have the King restored. They consulted privately with some of the Officers of the Army, whom they trusted most, and these approved so well of the Expedient, that the General was Treated with about it in White-Hall; where Haslerig told him, 'That many of his Friends were much troubled at the Parliaments Actions, which tended both to the ruine of him, and all the good people of the Nation, since it was evident, that by what they had Voted the day before, nothing was intended but the Restitution of the King. His overthrow, they said, must needs succeed the admission of the King; for a Merit too great to be rewarded, could have no recompence but death; whereof frequent Examples are to be found in all History, and in none more pregnant than our own; where it is recorded, That the same Stanley who placed the Crown upon Henry the Seventh's Head, had his own struck off, upon a very frivolous pretence, when the reason was only excess of Merit. They told him likewise, They found a Commonwealth-Government not agreeable with the disposition of the People, who are always bad Judges of what is best for themselves; and therefore since a Single Person was necessary, there could not be one fitter than he for that Office. To which they had very good grounds to believe all the good People of the Nation would concur with them:

The Commonwealth Faction desire the General rather to take the Government upon himself, than to bring in the King. They Treat with him about it.

The General told them, 'He himself was not well pleased at the late unnecessary Vote of Parliament concerning the Engagement, but many of the most discreet Members had been with him, and satisfied him, that they had no design in it, but to keep themselves free against the next Parliament; for in regard (they said) that he had consented that the final determination of Government should be referred to that, they were unwilling to anticipate their Counsels by determining of it by that Engagement, which would be too great a Snare unto them: Still urging, 'That they knew not any cause he should have of fear, for that the very Writ of Summons of the next Parliament, did sufficiently defend the Government, in restraining their Debates to it. As for the Government in his own Person, he said, The experience of Cromwel's Fate gave him Reasons to avoid the Rock on which that Family was split.

They replied, 'That Oliver Cromwel usurped the Dominion against the suffrage of the Army, and the consent of all the good people; whereas he should have it by their unanimous consent, and under what Name and Title he pleased to accept it.

The General would by no means hear more of these temptations, resolving not to lose the Honour derived to him from as Ancient a stock of Gentry as any was in England, by so treacherous a Prostitution of it.

The General refuseth their Offer.

A little before these Men went to the General, Commissary Clarges had been tampered with by them, to the same purpose; and observing them to go from him to his Lordship, he deliberated how to extricate him from further Applications of this kind, and punish the Insolency of these Undertakers.

The Council of State sitting at the time of this private Conference, and within two Chambers of the place where it was transacted, he sent in to the Council to Sir Anthony Ashley-Cooper, and informed him of what he knew, and what he further suspected: Upon which it was agreed, That as soon as the General should depart from them, and come into the Council, he should move, That all Clerks and Attendants, that were not Councillors, should withdraw, and the Doors be locked; and then declare, That he had had Information of a dangerous Design in some seditious persons, who were contriving to make Disturbances in the Nation, and that they had proceeded so far, as to make some indecent Overtures to him, of which he desired that the Council might receive a full discovery, that thereupon they might apply themselves to prevent the Consequences of it.

Commissary Clarges gives intimation of these proceedings to the Council of State.

But the General being unwilling to expose those men to ruine, (though they deserved not his favour) because his purposes were designed to be effected by the most peaceable ways, told the Council, That there was not so much danger in agitation as they apprehended; but that it was true, some had been with him to be resolved in scruples concerning the present Transactions in Parliament, but they went away from him well satisfied.

The General in favour of those Persons mitigates the matter.

Thus

They yet attempted to make a Mutiny in the Army.

A Declaration brought by the Officers to the General to Sign.

Okey's Speech at the Council of Officers.

Commissary Clarges his Answer.

Thus the goodness of the General was abused; for these unreasonable men, when they saw they could not allure him to their ends by the temptation of power, attempted to make a Mutiny in the Army; wherein they prevailed so far, as that the Officers had had one Meeting, and had appointed another. In their first they were so heated, that a Declaration was immediately prepared, and brought by some of them to the General, to oblige him with his Army to declare for a Commonwealth, and engage against all them that should attempt the setting up of a Single Person; and that he should send to the Parliament to joyn with them in this Declaration.

Commissary Clarges and Mr. Clark, the General's Secretary, were with him when this was brought to him, and observing great trouble in his Countenance at the reading of it, moved, That he would defer the signing or giving any opinion of it till the next Morning, because then the Officers of the Army were to have a General Council. This was done, that the General might have time to provide himself of Arguments against it, and prepare some of his Friends to joyn with him: One of the chief Motives that induced him to make Mr. Morrice an Officer of the Army, was to have his aid in Consultations at such times as these: For there were frequent Meetings of Officers; and one of so good Judgment and Elocution, as he, could not but persuade much: So that he had been the fittest Person that could have been thought on, had not his being unused to such Assemblies made him not care to be present at them.

The next Morning a great concourse of Officers met at St. James's, and Colonel Okey opened the Council, with a long Speech, of the fears they were in of an Inundation of Evils breaking in upon them, to invade their Civil and Religious Liberties; and that if great care was not used to prevent it, Charles Stuart would be introduced: And that the best Expedient that could be thought of, was to send immediately to the Parliament, to oblige them to declare and engage for a Free-State and Commonwealth, without a King or House of Lords: And if they refused to do it, to take such a Remedy as God should put into their hearts to save the Nation from destruction.

Commissary Clarges answered, That he saw no cause for those fears that were insinuated; and that if they sent to the Parliament in such a manner, they would find no pleasing return from them; for if these Men would have been terrified by the Army, there would not have been fourteen of them Impeached at one time of Treason, and two hundred secluded at another; and the first thing they would probably do, upon the receipt of such a Message, would be to dissolve themselves, and then there would be no Government; but instead of the Single Person they were so much afraid of, they must necessarily have recourse to Richard Cromwel, and expose themselves to his Revenge, for the Indignities they had lately with so much scorn put upon him and his Family.

And as for the General (applying himself to him) he said, He knew he would not assume the Government, having heard him profess, (on occasion of these Alterations) he would rather be drawn in pieces with wild horses, than be so treacherous to the Nation.

The General concluded, and told them, The time of this Parliaments ending was so near; they could not do the ills some of them (he hoped) causlessly feared; And that from the next Parliament he doubted not they would receive better satisfaction than they had in this, since it was provided in the ACT for their Assembling, that none should be Elected that had been against the Parliament since 1641. Withal, He confirmed what Commissary Clarges had said, That if by this violent proceeding they should make the Parliament hastily dissolve themselves, and leave the Nation in confusion, they must not expect he would take upon him the Government, which he had rather lose his life than accept.

After this, there was little moved by any of the Officers; only one said, That nothing could be hoped from Qualifications for a new Parliament, for they themselves being to be Judges of them, it might so happen, that the major part might be of such as were not themselves Qualified.

The General knew this to be an unanswerable Argument, (and it was for this reason he pressed for a new Parliament on any terms) but was unwilling to hear more discourse of this kind, and therefore told them, Nothing was more injurious to Discipline, than their meeting in Military Councils to interpose in Civil things. And from that time he forbade them to assemble again; and within a few days after, that is to say, on the 17th of March, the Parliament by Act dissolved it self, having before summoned a Parliament to succeed them the 25th day of April following; and passed two Votes to keep the Royal Party out of both House and Army. The first concerning the Militia, where no person was to be admitted for a Commissioned Officer, without declaring in these words following. I do acknowledge and declare, that the War undertaken by both Houses of Parliament in their defence, against the Forces raised in the name of the late King, was just and Lawful; and that Magistracy, and Ministry, are the Ordinances of God. Secondly, Resolved, that all and every Person who have advised, or voluntarily aided, abetted or assisted in any War against the Parliament, (since the first day of January 1641.) his, or their Sons, unless he or they have since manifested their good affections to this Parliament, shall be incapable to be elected to serve as Members of the next Parliament. The Royal Party, who had suffered so much in the Defence and Service of the Government, and who had behaved themselves so Honourably in their endeavours of extinguishing all Animosities, upon this hopeful change of Affairs; little, I say, did they expect to see themselves turn'd out of Doors by such a preclusion from Publick Office, or Employment, upon the very Test of their Fidelity to their Sovereign. But these Votes were little heeded by the Electors, the People having so great an esteem for the Royal Party, that almost generally wheresoever they stood, they carried it; and kept their places too in the House of Commons, notwithstanding a contrivance there also, to have ejected them after they were met.

Monsieur

The Conference between Monsieur de Bordeaux, and Commissary Clarges.

Monsieur de Bordeaux the French Ambassador then Resident in London, was very desirous to interesse Cardinal Mazarini, in this great Revolution of Government, and having had acquaintance with Clarges, expected by him to discover all the Generals Designs, and in order thereunto, sent his Secretary to him, To desire him to move the General, to have Licence to give him a visit, and to confer about some overtures he had to make to him.

Clarges, upon this intimation, went to the Ambassador, who carried him into his Closet, and they two being alone, he told him, 'That it was visible to all, that the General had some great Design in projection, and that most wise men believed it was, either to advance himself to the Monarchy of these Nations, or introduce the King; and that in either of these, he had the advantage of being more serviceable to him than any other; for if he should use any Englishman in so important an Intrigue, if he should not have success, that would be brought in evidence against him to his destruction: Whereas he as a stranger, and a publick Minister could not be questioned. He further said, 'What he proposed, was not only in reference to himself, but to Cardinal Mazarini, who would be glad to have the honour of his friendship, assist him faithfully in all his purposes. He said moreover, 'That he could not undertake to determine, 'Whether it was not best for him to dignifie his Family with the Empire of these Kingdoms, or to restore the King to them; They were both actions of much glory; and if the latter were as easie, the honour of it would be as great: But that he might be confident of the Cardinal he did assure him, that Oliver Cromwell kept so strict a League with him, that he did not assume the government without his privity, and was directed step by step by him in the progress of that action: And therefore, if he resolved on that course, he should not only have the Cardinals friendship and Counsel in the attempt, but a safe retreat and honourable support in France, if he failed in it. Or if he would admit the King, and put the manner of it into the Cardinals hands, whatever he would desire for himself of Security, or honour from the Crown, he would undertake to obtain, and in such a manner, that it should rather seem by the Cardinals advice, then his particular Inclination; and the King would gladly receive it, and France should be the place to which (if he agreed) the King should presently retreat; where he should have a Train provided proportionable to his greatness; that his People here might, with greater Reverence, apply themselves to him; and by this way (he said) the General might not only oblige the King of England, but the King his Master also, by making him a Mediator and Instrument in his Restauration.

To this Clarges answered, 'That the matter was too deep for him to be involv'd in, in regard (as he himself had acknowledged) of the danger of having such a secret known to any second Person a Native of England.

'But nevertheless, to satisfie him, he assured him, That the General did not intend to take upon him the government, but submit all to the determination of the next Parliament.

He then Replyed, 'That a Parliament in England was a kind of tumultuary Council, so various in their Debates, that no certain measure could be taken from them, and therefore for not taking this course which he advis'd, he might be hurried by their froward proceedings, to some sudden Enterprize, neither safe for himself, nor good for the people; and that with him, in any misfortune, all his Relations would be ruin'd.

To this Conference, Clarges put an end, by telling him, 'He would take a suddain occasion to sound the Generals Inclinations, and though he would not directly tell him what had pass'd betwixt them, he should nevertheless guess, whether it might be fit for him to impart it to him; the only difficulty that remain'd, was the Generals want of the French-Tongue; Which the Ambassador said, 'Was not necessary, for that he had English enough to be understood, and to understand all that should be said to him; and thus they parted.

Clarges told all that pass'd to Mr. Morrice, The General and to the General himself, who absolutely refus'd to have any Commerce with the Ambassador or the Cardinal; nevertheless, that he might not appear uncivil, he was contented to receive his Visit, but on Condition, That he should not propose any thing to him in reference to the publick affairs of Government.

This was signified to the Ambassador, and he came that Evening to complement the General, making great professions of his Services to him, on all occasions, without descending to particulars.

Much more successful was the Application made by Sir John Greenvil, who being an active Agent for the King, and a neer Kinsman to the General, was therefore by his Majesty thought a fit person to be employed to him; but he knowing the wary temper of the General, was much troubled how to get access to him; till bethinking himself of Mr. Morrice, his Neighbour in the Countrey, a person often conversant with the General, he concluded by his mediation to do it, and thereupon requested him to let the General know he had something of great Importance to impart to him, and desired he would give him the opportunity to do it.

When Mr. Morrice inform'd the General of this, he receiv'd it with much strangeness; for although Sir John was his near Relation, yet by reason of his youth, and the Generals long absence from his Countrey, they had little acquaintance with each other, and therefore he told Mr. Morrice, Except he would send him information by him, of the nature of his business, he could not admit of any intercourse with him.

Mr. Morrice told him, He had already desired to know that, but Greenvil refused it. The General in his mind, liked well of this reservedness in Sir John, and bid Mr. Morrice acquaint him, That if he came the next day at nine in the evening to St. James's, he would speak with him. And accordingly Greenvil came to him, at the appointed time, which was the next evening, after the dissolution of the Parliament.

When he came, after he had requested Pardon for the importunity of his visit, he desired his permission to deliver a Message he had to him from from his Majesty. The General seem'd surpriz'd at this saying; but seeing that there was no body in the Room but Mr. Morrice, and he at a good distance from them, he bid him say what he pleas'd.

He delivers his Message.

He then presented to him a Letter from the King, and told him, 'That his Majesty had great Confidence in his affections to him, and since he had complied so far with the desires of all the sober part of the Kingdom, for the admission of the Secluded Members, in order to a free Parliament; The consequences of that could not but give sufficient evidence of his Inclinations to his Majesties Service and Restitution, which would naturally flow from his Endeavours, in Conjunction with their Councils.

The General's Answer.

The General replied, 'That he had long lamented the miserable distraction of his Native Countrey, and waited a fit occasion to contribute his assistance to the Redemption of it. And when Lambert and those with him had interrupted the Parliament; Considering that the Army had been newly in a great measure by that Parliament modell'd, he supposed by a Declaration for their Restitution he might gain a Power in his hands for better purposes, and, as the better to bring these his purposes about, he resolv'd if by his Arms the Parliament should be restored, together, with those few Members which sat at their interruption, to admit those also who had been seclud'd; intending to that end, by degrees, to put his Army into such hands as would favour his intentions: That it was well known to all, How he was disappointed in that design, and through what difficulties he arriv'd to the Station he was then in, nor was he even at that time secure from great danger of disappointment, if he should not manage his affairs with more than ordinary secrecie.

'As to the Kings Majesty (he said) None wish'd him greater felicity than he, nor desired his Restauration with more passion; but if it were not cautiously attempted, it would be out of his Power to serve him in it, since in Councils of so nice concernment, there would not be room for two Errors. The People he told him, had been long seduc'd by seditious insinuations, and the Army in the hands of such, as had always been against his Royal Father, and many of them even against Monarchy it self; but nevertheless, he hoped, if they might find the same security under his Majesties Government, as they had under the Usurpers of it, he might not despair of their reduction to obedience. And to effect this, it was his humble advice, that his Majesty should prevent their fears, by declaring a free and general Pardon to all his Subjects, and engage himself to give it under the Great-Seal, to all that should submit to his Authority, except such as should be exempted by the Parliament.

'And that he would consent to any Act or Acts of Parliament, that should be presented to him for the settlement of publick Sales and Dispositions of Lands, to Officers, Souldiers, & others; and the payment of the Souldiers Arrears; As also for toleration of Liberty of Conscience to all his Subjects; And that none should be punished for differences in matters of Religion who should not disturb the publick Peace.

Sir John asked him, 'What he would give him in Command for himself, and if he would write to his Majesty? Which he excus'd at that time, saying, 'If his Letter should be intercepted before he had compleated the Reforming the Armies, it would be impossible for him to keep them in temper, or hinder the subversion of all he had hitherto done; Adding, That he sought not his own advantage in his Endeavours for the publick benefit of his Country: and that having with much hazard, brought matters near to a fair issue, in pursuance of the general suffrage of the Nations, he was unwilling, by indirection, to venture a relapse, but would choose to involve himself in the same Condition with the generality of the People, in expectation of what the next Parliament should bring forth, to the happiness of his Majesty, & all his Kingdoms.

Sir John Greenville writ down the substance of this Discourse, and repeated it to the General, to be the better able to retain it in his Memory; but as soon as he had read it, he entreated him to tear it in pieces, and conjur'd him to acquaint no person whatsoever with their Conference, except the King himself, and to request him also to conceal it. But above all things, he intreated him, To desire his Majesty from him, to go out of the King of Spains Dominions to Breda, or some other place under the Government of the States of the United Provinces; for that he had certain Intelligence, he would be detained by the King of Spains Ministers, if he stay'd in his Dominions.

And at Sir John's Parting from him, he told him, He was glad that this occasion of presenting his Duty to the King, was an effect of his diligence, whom he was glad to find so industrious and vigilant in his Masters Service: of which he had before some experience when his Brother Nicholas came from him into Scotland.

He promis'd to observe all the General's Instructions; and when he came to Ostend (where he arriv'd the 23th of March) he put all that had passed betwixt them into Writing, and digested it into form, to be presented to his Majesty. And in the Conduct of the whole affair, he was so secret, that the Lord Mordant, who went over with him to his Majesty, knew nothing of it.

At Bruxels he retired to a private house, to which his Majesty (upon intimation) very secretly repaired, and with great satisfaction receiv'd the Intelligence he brought, but because he could not prosecute the Generals desire (as to his removal) without advice for the manner of executing it, he consulted the Marquess of Ormond, the Lord Chancellor, and Mr. Secretary Nicholas, being persons in whom, from just reason and experience, he had most intire confidence, by whose assistance the matter was so order'd, that in two or three days, he took his Journey to Breda; where we shall leave his Majesty in Consultation, to return to the Transactions in England of that busie time.

The Council of State took care to have the Act put in speedy execution throughout England, for the Election of Members to serve in Parliament, and for putting the Militia into sober hands: And because many seditious People were endeavouring to debauch the Army, they published a Proclamation to forbid all persons whatsoever, to correspond with any of the Officers & Souldiers

A farther discourse between them confirming the sincerity of the General's Intentions.

Sir John takes his Journey towards Bruxels.

He gives his Majesty an account of his Negotiation, and the effects thereof.

The King resolves to move to Breda.

The Council of State set forth a Proclamation for the preventing of tumults and disturbances.

Souldiers of the Army in the way of agitating, or otherwise, whereby any dissatisfaction might be raised towards the present government, to endanger the peace of the Nation, giving power to all Officers, both Military and Civil, to seize upon any Persons offending as aforesaid: And for the better encouragement of all whom it should concern, they declared and promised to give to the discoverer of any such person, who should apprehend and secure such offenders, the summe of ten pounds. And this Proclamation was ordered to be published in the Head of every Regiment, Troop and Company of the Army, to the intent, the same should be the better taken notice of, and put in more effectual execution: And the General sent it to every Regiment to be proclaimed accordingly. But this did not sufficiently prevent the ill humours amongst the Souldiers, which made Commissary Clarges consult privately with the General, about some other more effectual course; he propos'd to frame an Engagement for all to subscribe, to acquiesce in whatsoever the next Parliament should do, and to displace all that should refuse: His Lordship liked very well of this Proposition, but thought it very hard to be executed; nevertheless, he encouraged him to go on, and that night alone he fram'd it, and immediately advis'd with Colonel Howard, Sir Anthony Ashley-Cooper, Mr. Ansley, and Colonel Knight (who all of them with one consent approved it, being all Persons of great Credit with the General) about the putting it in execution. Colonel Knight undertook by the next day at noon, to get it Signed by all the Officers of his own Regiment, and the Generals Regiment of Horse, and the Life-guard; and Colonel Howard did the like for his Regiment which lay about Croydon, for he had so modell'd it, that he was sure of all his Officers; all which by the foresaid time being accordingly effected, they met together, at Sir Anthony Ashley-Coopers Lodging, and glad to see their business so well advanc'd by the subscription of these three Regiments, they in the next place, thought it expedient to have the Officers of all the Regiments in London, to be summon'd to meet that Evening at St. James's, which was accordingly done: and they being all met, It was mov'd to them by Colonel Knight, Commissary Clarges draws up an Engagement to be subscrib'd for acquiescing in the determinations of the next Parliament.

The Officers of three Regiments subscribe it.

The substance of Col. Knights Speech to the Officers at St. James's, in encouraging them to subscribe the Engagement.

That at this time, when several Imputations lay upon the Army of Inconstancy, and that many Dissatisfied Persons were endeavouring to divide them, it was requisite they should give some publick Testimony of their Affections and Inclinations; and in order thereunto, some Officers having shew'd him an Address, which they had framed to be presented to the General, to testify their Resolution of Obedience and Duty, to the Powers God had placed over them; He could not but approve so well of it, as readily by himself, and all his Officers, to give their Attestations to it, and some more had done the like, it being intended by those who had first advis'd it, to be tendered to every Regiment of the Army; of which, there being a great part here, they had by the Generals Permission invited them thither, to communicate what was done, and to desire their Concurrence with them in it.

Colonel Knight and Clarges had before prepared most of the Officers of the Regiments which came from Scotland, so that they made no difficulty of it, especially seeing a Subscription of other Regiments to induce them: Moreover, it was intimated, That their Meeting was by the privity and permission of the General, which Obligation they knew none would offer to oppose: The Address was immediately read, being in these words:

WEE the Officers of the Army under your Excellencies Command, whose Names are herunto written, being truly sensible of the merciful and wonderful Providence of Almighty God, in bringing Us, after so many Revolutions and Changes, into an hopeful way of Settlement; and perceiving, to our great grief, that there are too many, who seeking more their own private Interest, than the Publick Good, are endeavouring to reduce us again to our old Necessities and Confusions; and that they have proceeded so far, as to cause Jealousies in the Council of State, in whom the Supream Power and Trust, now, till the Meeting of the Parliament, is residing, Do hold it our Duties, for the preventing of all such Jealousies for the future, and for the strengthening of your Excellencies Hands, in the carrying on of this Good Work, in which it hath pleased God to make you so highly Instrumental, humbly to make this Address unto your Excellency, in the Name of our Selves, and all the Souldiers under our Command, and to Declare, That We shall, according to our Duties, carry and behave our selves, as Officers of an Army instructed by your Example and Discipline, to obey, and not to dispute the Orders of our Superiours, and shall freely and readily observe such Commands, as we shall receive from your Excellency, or the Council of State, or the Parliament when Assembled: And in particular, we shall, according to the late Proclamation of the Council of State, of the 17th of March, decline any Meeting or Meetings, for the contriving or carrying on of any Declarations or Subscriptions, concerning Affairs of State, or Government, thereby avoiding those Mischiefs, which made many lately in Arms, so justly distastful to the People, by making themselves a divided Interest from the rest of them. And we are the more willing to make this Address at this time, to evince to all the World the Integrity of our Obedience, because of the great Expectation of the next Parliament, from whom we hope for a happy Settlement to all the Nations; And that they may have no ill Apprehensions of Us, We are resolv'd, as it becomes Us in Duty, to submit to whatsoever the Lord shall bring forth from their Consultations, knowing that Parliaments only can secure Us in our Religious and Civil Rights: And forasmuch as many Representations heretofore made to Persons in Eminent Authority, have been too frequently contriv'd in the Name of the Army, which were done rather in Formality, (as we perceive by the Event) than otherwise; We do solemnly desire, that this may be Recorded as a Testimony and Witnes against Us, if ever We shall be guilty of any such Back-slidings.

The Form of the Armies Engagement.

At that very time, this Engagement was signed by Lieutenant Colonel Morgan, and all the Officers of the Generals Regiment of Foot; by Colonel Hubblethorn, and all the Officers of his Regiment; by Colonel Cloberry, Colonel Lydeot, Colonel Read, and the rest, with all their their Officers; which made up in all, with those that had sign'd before, Ten Regiments of Horse and Foot, besides the Life-guard, and all the General-Officers. Also, Collonel Fairfax, and Collonel Bethel, who upon the first Consultation of this Matter had been sent unto, in four days had return'd the Subscriptions of themselves, and all their Officers; after which it was agreed, That Collonel Howard, with fourty Officers, should present it to the General, which was done at St. James's the 9th. Day of April, and was with much satisfaction and content received by him: It was also afterwards recommended to Major-General Morgan in Scotland; to have it subscribed by his Officers there, and likewise to all the Regiments in England, with an Accompt of what had bin done in London, and the Names of all those Regiments that had concurr'd in it.

And because he heard that some disaffected Persons were tampering to seduce the Souldiers in Scotland, he sent another Regiment of Horse, and a Regiment of Foot thither, who were of such as Major-General Morgan might confide in, to assist him, if need were, to model the rest. In conclusion, this Address was subscribed by all the Regiments, and the Subscriptions return'd to the General; only some Officers refus'd it, and were immediately displac'd, and the General took that opportunity, of giving to the Lord Faulconbridge Collonel Rossiter, and General Mountague, to each of them a Regiment of Horse and to Collonel Sheffield a Regiment of Foot. And whilest he was thus employ'd in ordering the Army, the Council of State was active in forming the Militia, in all the Cities and Counties of England and Wales, wherein such care was taken, to have the Arms in good Hands; that from all Parts the Lists of the Officers were sent to the Council of State, to be by the General and them approv'd.

These Preparations engaged many Faction People to design against the Government, inso-much, that on the Evening of that Day, wherein Collonel Howard presented the above-mentioned Address to the General, Collonel Lambert having made an Escape out of the Tower, was conceal'd by some of that Party, that had been lately engaged against General Monk, and some others of Fanatick Principles: These held a Council in London, but were not so private in their Consultations, but the General had from time to time intimation of much of their Proceedings: They sent some busie men to all the Regiments in England, and these Officers that refus'd the Address, had intic'd many of the Troopers to steal after them; but such was the vigilance of the rest of the Officers, that there got not above Seven or Eight Troops of Horse in a Body to joyn with Lambert, and but one Company of Foot.

On Wednesday the 18th. of April, the General, upon Advice from Collonel Streater, of Lambert's hovering in the North-Parts, and of the want of Horse in his Quarters, sent for Collonel Ingoldsby to him, and told him, He must be at Northampton with his Regiments on the Saturday following; and that he should receive Orders to take any of Collonel Rossiter's Troops to his Assistance, which quartered in those Parts: He also told him, That Collonel Streater, a Person whom he could Trust, was with some of his Companies at Northampton, whom he would find ready to joyn with him. The Colonel told him, That his Regiment was dispersed in Norfolk and Suffolk, but he would do his endeavours to get them together. And he was so diligent here in, that by the Friday following he got his Regiment to Cambridge, and on Saturday in the Evening to Northampton.

The General also sent Collonel Howard with his Regiment, and some other select Troops, towards Worcestershire and Warwickshire, to hinder any Defection of the Troops in those Parts; and to have an Eye towards Coventry, which Lambert had design'd to Garrison; and indeed he had done it, had not the Care of the General prevented it, by Ordering three Companies of Collonel Streater's Regiment to Quarter in that City: The Colonel also sending one Company more to strengthen that Place, who in their March met with a Party of Horse, among whom was one who having been Major to that Regiment, shewed them Lambert's Orders, to march back again: But the Lieutenant that was intrusted with the Command of that Company, observing the Colonel's Orders, marched intire with great speed, stood upon his defence, and opposed them twice in his march thither.

The Council of State by Proclamation, declar'd Lambert and his Adherents Traytors, and the General was careful, the very next day after his getting out of Prison, to give Notice of it to all the Regiments and Troops, to prevent his Design of seducing them, and to command them to seize on him: By which Diligence, and the sending these Parties out, his Confederates were interrupted in their Endeavours. One Merry, a Disbanded discontented Officer of Col. Smithson's Regiment, had inticed fourty of Captain Peverel's Troop to revolt, with Design to seize on York, but by the care of other Troops they were dissipated; and one Everard, and Captain Lockier, two discontented Officers, that had been lately in Custody, and releas'd upon their Engagement, not to act any thing in Disturbance of the Publick Peace, did nevertheless march through Nottingham, with a Seditious Troop of their Companions.

Whereof Captain Sherman of Collonel Sanders's Regiment, having notice, drew out his own Troop, and that of Captain Craddock's of Hackers Regiment, to engage them; but immediately Craddock's Troop joyned with the Enemy, which made Sherman (finding himself too weak for them) to retreat to Nottingham, to secure that place, where the Mayor, Aldermen, and Gentry, gave him ready assistance. This News made the General give Orders, That the late Address signed by the Officers, should be tendred to all the private Souldiers also, which made so through a Reformation, that in many Regiments Thirty of a Troop disbanded, rather than they would consent to it, and many in the Foot Companies also left their Arms: But in all the General's Regiments in London, that marched with him from Scotland, there were but two Dissenters.

On Easter-Eve, Collonel Ingoldsby joyned with Collonel Streater at Northampton where he was at that time, and had been some days before; The Earl of Exceter who with several Loyal Gentlemen of that County, to the number of near near one hundred Horse, with much Resolution offered to assist Colonel Streater: Likewise the Trained Bands of that Town were in Arms at the same time, in order to the securing thereof, in case of a necessity of Colonel Streaters attending Lamberts Motion; The Colonel purposing that Night, if need had been, to have mounted 400 Foot of his Regiment with the Horses that came into the Town that day (against the Fair on Monday following) and to have beaten up Lamberts Quarters.

Col. Ingoldsby and Col. Streater march against Lambert.

On Easter Day early Intelligence was brought to Colonel Ingoldsby and Colonel Streater, That Lambert was at Daventry; upon which they marched towards him: When they came to Daventry, they heard Lambert was marched two miles from thence, and therefore hastened to meet him; which they did in a plain Field, where a little Brook parted them. Lambert had with him besides the Troops of Horse before mentioned, these Persons, viz. Colonel Okey, Colonel Axtel, Colonel Cobbet, Lieutenant-Colonel Young, Major Creed, Captain Timothy Clare, Captain Gregory, Captain Spinage, besides divers private Souldiers, who were Anabaptists.

The two Parties fac'd one the other near four hours, during which time, Colonel Ingoldsby, and Colonel Streater spent their time, partly in their vigilant observation of the Intention of the Enemy, and partly in encouraging of the Horse and Foot under their command, whereby they begot a more than ordinary resolution in both Horse and Foot: In the mean time, Lambert sent out several Scouts towards them; but Ingoldsby would not permit any of his to leave their Ranks, only he himself riding up towards them, had many Discourses with them: Ingoldsby was not known to the Scouts, but appearing to them as a private Souldier dealt so effectually with them, by laying open the danger of their Action, that 25 Troopers, with a Quarter-Master, came over to him. The Colonel dismounted and disarm'd them for the present, because they were unwilling to engage in his party, but afterwards restored their Horses and Arms to them.

Defeats his Party, and takes him Prisoner.

Lamberts delay in Engaging being observed by Col. Streater, he advised that both Horse and Foot should immediately advance, and put the Business to an Issue, out of the Confidence he had of the Foot especially: And withal desired Col. Ingoldsby, That if he should be routed, he would rally with what speed he could; For that he should be confident to find the Foot to maintain their Ground. Colonel Streater's Foot being about Five Hundred; two compleat Companies, the rest commanded Men out of several Companies, most Pikes, which in that Champion-ground would serve well to secure the Body against the Horse.

When the two Bodies came near, just as Col. Ingoldsby was going to charge, Colonel Streater commanded six Files of Musqueteers to advance, one File gave fire and hurt one or two of Lamberts Horse; his Drums beat, and in good Order he advanced, having given strict command that his Musqueteers should not fire till they came as near as push of Pike. But Lamberts men held the Noses of their Pistols towards the ground; and Nelthrops Troop came off to Ingoldsby; Haslerigs Troop having deserted him before; for Colonel Ingoldsby sending Captain Elsmore before him with a party, as he march'd to find Lambert, met Captain Haslerigg, and took him prisoner, but releas'd him upon his Parole, to send his whole Troop over to joyn with Ingoldsby, which he faithfully perform'd, sending it to them by his Quarter-master, but retir'd himself: Colonel Ingoldsby told Lambert, He was his Prisoner: Whereupon Creed and the rest earnestly intreated him, to do what he pleased with them, but to permit Lambert to escape; acquainting him, That his Life could be of no advantage to him; Which Ingoldsby absolutely refused telling them, He would not be treacherous to those that had commanded him by such an ungenerous Act: Lambert then turned about his Horse, and attempted to escape, but Ingoldsby pursued him so close, that he came quickly up to him, and vow'd to pistol him, if he did not immediately yield. Lambert, in great depression of Spirit, twice pray'd him to let him escape; but when he saw he could not prevail, submitted as all the rest did, except Okey, Axtel, and Cleer, who escaped.

General Montague, who had been some time before by the Generals advice, made one of the Generals at Sea, (General Monk being himself the other) and sent to take charge of the Fleet, sent an account to the Council of State, of the condition of it, how that Vice-admiral Lawson, and with him the whole Navy, had received him with great satisfaction, and were all fix'd in obedience to their Authority, with resolutions to submit to the Determination of the next Parliament.

The Tuesday after this defeat of Lambert, all the Militia of the City of London drew into Hide-Park; there were six Trained-Band Regiments, the Red, the White, the Green, the Blew, the Yellow, and the Orange; besides several Regiments of Auxiliaries: The Red was commanded by Colonel Bateman Alderman, the White by Col. Wale Alderman, the Green by Col. John Robinson Alderman, the Blew by Col. William Vincent, the Yellow by Col. William Broomfield, and the Orange by Col. Thomas Bloodworth, all men of courage and good Affections to the Peace and Felicity of their Native Country: They made up in all twelve thousand Men: The General, the Lord Major, Aldermen, and a great concourse of Noble-men and Gentlemen, were present at the Appearance. And that Evening, Colonel Lambert, Colonel Cobbet, and Major Creed, were brought Prisoners to the Council of State, and committed to the Tower. And the next day the rest of the Prisoners were brought by Captain Parry to the General, and by him committed to the Marshal-General.

The defeat of Lambert did not make the Phantiques leave the pursuit of their Mischiefs, several Seditious Phamphlets being published in Print, to deprave the Minds of the People, and Tickets were thrown into the Courts of Guard in the Night to debauch the Souldiers. But none of them appear'd to have been pen'd with more virulency and Malice, than that vile supposititious Paper which they scatter'd about, carrying in its Frontice-piece, A Letter from Bruxels, &c. with which some of his Majesties most implacable Enemies attempted to poyson, or palliate the now high Expectations, and Impressions of his good Subjects: and it was in truth so fatally tim'd, and so subtilly contriv'd, that it had like to have done a great deal of Mischief amongst some, who not acquainted with the innate, and unparallel'd inclination of his Majesty to Clemency, began to apprehend their forwardness for his Restauration, and to remit of their former zeal: But this Hydra was dextrously cut off by Mr. Evelyn, whom we formerly mention'd, in a Reply which was Printed, to the intire satisfaction of all that read it. I take pleasure to mention the Particular, because upon another occasion, long before, he publish'd, with no small hazard of his Life and Liberty, that his Apology to the Royal Party, in answer to that Remonstrance, Entituled, the Plea of the Army, (contriv'd and set forth by that Phanatick Power, immediately upon their Dethroning of Richard) as being it seems no longer able to support the common, but unjust Reproaches of his Majesties Cause, by Arguments deriv'd from their ill Conduct, and Fatal Success of divers of his suffering Party; and because I take it to be the boldest Piece (not excepting even the famous Killing no Murther; written, as we since learn, by Captain Titus) that ever durst see the light in that raging Period; and for that it was no less than thrice re-printed (an Honour which the Pamphlets of that Age did seldom arrive to) and observ'd to have won more Profelytes to the King, than any thing of that nature had done before it: which, was a Service the greatest that Conjunction was capable of, and none of the least to his Majesties Advantage all along; as those who shall please to call to mind the Effects of those Paper-Weapons, must needs acknowledge, by warming and inspiriting the Hearts of an oppressed People, in danger of being poyson'd by the perpetual Venome of his Majesties Adversaries, whose Pens as well as Swords, were daily sharpened against him, but for such seasonable Antidotes, as upon all occasions encountred their Libels, and insidiary Discourses; amongst which there were also several Letters sent to the General from unknown Hands, to subvert his Allegiance likewise; and to Clarges it was written, That notwithstanding his Practices, to introduce the King and his Family, all his Endeavours were blasted by Morrice, who had ascribed to himself alone the Reputation of that Service, and dispersed to all the Royal Party, that he had no Credit with the General, and therefore to him only Application should be made, as to one in whom the General repos'd his greatest trust. But these and all other Artifices were too poor to subvert the Loyalty of one, who valued not to whom the good of his Services was attributed, if the Effects he desired were produced by them: But nevertheless, these Practices, to divide the Generals Friends, made the Council of State, the General, and all his Officers more watchful for the Publick Peace, and more diligent in their Duties: The Officers began more and more to be convinced of their former Errours, by several publique and private Discourses of the Clemency and other Royal Endowments of his Majesty: That which they most apprehended, was from Rumours which had been dispersed amongst them, of the implacability of all those of his party, of whom it was said,

If they had Power they would shew themselves full of Rancour and Revenge against all that were engaged in the late War against them: and observing that most of the Members of Parliament were such, notwithstanding all the Qualifications for their Elections, many strange Doubts possessed them; and amongst other Effects of their Diseased Imaginations, they fancied, the Parliament (when met) would rather hinder, than promote his Majesties Goodness and Mercy towards them: But whilst they were in the midst of these various Inquietudes, the Royal Party, in all the Counties of England, published several excellent Declarations, which fully satisfied and appeased their Minds, wherein they Declared, That they resolved to adhere to the largest Assurances of amicable Agreement with all Persons, and that they would never put any Difference betwixt such as should now unite with them, and those who first engaged in the same Perswasion with themselves. Of all which, we shall only herein publish one, they being all to the same purpose: It was Intituled,

A Declaration of the Nobility and Gentry, that adhered to the late King in and about the City of London; which was expressed in these words:

After the Miseries of a Civil War, and the many and fruitless Attempts towards Settlement, upon several Interests, and imaginary Forms of Government, It having pleased Almighty God, by unexpected and wonderful means, to give these Nations a probable hope of being restored to those Laws and Priviledges, which have been transmitted to them from their Ancestors; We do Declare, That we think our selves obliged, next to Divine Providence, to attribute this Gracious Work to his Excellency the Lord General Monck, who, as he had the Courage to assert the Publick Liberty, and the Prudence to carry it on against so many Difficulties, has also had the Happiness, to lead Us thus far through the Wilderness of Confusion, without passing the Red-Sea of Blood: And because the Enemies of the Publique Peace, have endeavoured to represent those of the Kings Party, as men implacable, and such as would sacrifice the Common Good to their own private Passions; We do sincerely profess, That we do reflect upon our past-sufferings as from the Hands of God, and therefore do not cherish any violent Thoughts or Inclinations, against those who have been any way Instrumental in them; And if the Indiscretion of any hot spirited Persons, transports them to Expressions contrary to this our sense, we utterly disclaim them; and desire, that the Imputation may extend no further, than the Folly of the Offenders. And we further Declare, That we intend by our quiet and peaceable Behaviour, to testify our submission to the present Power, as it now resides in the Council of State, in expectation of the future Parliament; upon whose Wisdom and Determinations, we trust God will give such a Blessing, as may produce a perfect Settlement, both in Church and State.

And

'And as his Excellency hath not chosen the 'Sandy Foundations of Self-government, but
'the firm Rock of National Interest, whereon to 'frame a Settlement; It is our hope and prayer,
'That when the building comes to be raised, it 'may not like Rome, have the beginning in the 'blood of Brethren, nor like Babel, be inter'rupted by Confusion of Tongues: but that 'we may all speak one Language, and be of 'one Name; That all mention of Parties and 'Factions, and all Rancour and animosities may 'be thrown in, and buried like Rubbish under
'the Foundation.

This and the other Declarations of the same nature, were wholesome Preparations to usher in the Parliament, which met at Westminster, on the 25th day of April. The Lords chose the Earl of Manchester to be their Speaker; and the House of Commons Sir Herbottle Grimstone; where after the appointment of the usual Committees for Priviledges, and other essential matters usual at their first Assembling, They gave all due acknowledgments to General Monk, for his Eminent Services & great Wisdom in subduing his Enemies without Blood, magnifying the Mercies of God, That made him so Instrumental to keep up the Nations from sinking, when no way appear'd whence Deliverance should arise.

Sir Arthur Haslerigg was by the General suspected to have contributed towards the Insurrection of Lambert, but upon notice thereof, he came to him, and gave him evident proofs to the contrary, and promised to live peaceably at home; having before quietly submitted his Regiments of Horse and Foot to the Generals dispose, together with the Garrisons of Berwick, New-Castle, Carlisle, and Tinnmouth.

On the 27th of April, Sir John Greenville attended the General, and presented to him a Letter from his Majesty, to be communicated to the Officers of the Army, and the Council of State, with a Commission from his Majesty to constitute him Captain-General of all the Armies of England, Scotland, and Ireland; informing him likewise, That he had Letters from his Majesty to both Houses of Parliament, the City, and the Navy.

His Excellency received the Commission with all Humility and Respect; but in regard the Parliament was Adjourn'd for three days, advis'd him the next day to deliver that Letter which was to be by him imparted to the Council of State, to the Council at their next Sitting; which he accordingly did, but they would not presume to open it without the Parliaments directions, and took caution of Sir John Greenville to attend the House at their next Sitting. At which time, by the General's advice, he went, without acquainting them, to the House of Lords, to inform them he had a Letter from the King; who being acquainted that Sir John Greenville attended at the door with a Letter from his Majesty, The Earl of Manchester went down to the Clerk and received it. The Letter had a Declaration inclosed in it; which were both read in the House; The Letter first, which was in these words: (Viz.)

His Majesties
Letter to the House of Lords.

Right Trusty and Right Welbelov'd Cousins, and Right Trusty and Welbelov'd Cousins, and Trusty and Right Welbelov'd; We Greet you well.
We cannot have a better reason to promise Our Self an end of Our Common Sufferings and Calamities, and that Our Own Just Power and Authority will with Gods Blessing be restored to Us, Than that We hear You are again acknowledged to have that Authority and Jurisdiction which hath always belonged to You by Your Birth, and the Fundamental Laws of the Land: And We have thought it very fit and safe for Us to call to you for your help in the Composing the Confounding Distempers and Distractions of the Kingdom, in which your Sufferings are next to those We have undergone Our Selves; And therefore you cannot but be the most proper Counsellors for removing those Mischiefs, and for preventing the like for the future. How great a Trust We repose in you, for the procuring and establishing a blessed Peace and Security for the Kingdom, will appear to you by Our inclosed Declaration; Which Trust, We are most confident you will discharge with what Justice and Wisdom that becomes you, and must always be expected from you; and that upon your experience, how one violation succeeds another, when the known Relations and Rules of Justice are once transgressed you will be as Jealous for the Rights of the Crown, and for the Honour of your King, as for your selves:
And then you cannot but discharge your Trust with good success, and provide for, and establish the Peace, Happiness and Honour, of King, Lords and Commons, upon that Foundation which can only support it, and We shall be all happy in each other: And as the whole Kingdom will bless God for you all, so We shall hold Our Self obliged in an especial manner to Thank you in particular, according to the affection you shall express towards Us. We need the less in-large to you upon this Subject, because We have likewise writ to the House of Commons, Which We suppose they will Communicate to you: And We pray God to bless your Joynt Endeavours for the good of Us all. And so We bid you very heartily farewell.

Given at Our Court at Breda, this 14 day of April, 1660. In the Twelfth Year of Our Reign.

The Declaration was next read, which was Intituled.

His Majestie's gracious Declaration to all his Loving Subjects.

CHARLES R.

His Majesties
Declaration.

CHARLES by the Grace of God, King of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c. To all our Loving Subjects of what Degree or Quality soever, Greeting. If the general Distraction & Confusion which is spread over the whole Kingdom, doth not awaken all men to a desire and longing, that those Wounds which have so many Years together been kept bleeding, may be bound up, all We can say will be to no purpose: However after this long silence, We have thought it Our Duty to declare how much We desire to contribute thereunto: And that as We can never give over the hope in good time to obtain the Possession of that Right which God and Nature hath made Our due;

so we do make it Our daily Suit to the Divine Providence, that he will, in Compassion to Us and our Subjects, after so long Misery and Sufferings, remit, and put Us into a quiet and peaceable possession of that Our Right, with as little Blood and Damage to Our People as is possible: Nor do we desire more to enjoy what is Ours, then that all Our Subjects may enjoy what by Law is theirs, by a full and intire administration of Justice thorowout the Land, and by extending Our Mercy where it is wanted and deserv'd.

And to the end that the fear of Punishment may not engage any Conscience of themselves of what is past, to a perseverance in Guilt for the future, by opposing the Quiet and Happiness of their Country in the Restoration both of King, Peers, and People, to their Just, Antient, and Fundamental Rights; We do by these Presents declare, That We do grant a Free and General Pardon, which We are ready, upon demand, to passe under Our Great Seal of England, to all Our Subjects of what degree or quality soever, who within forty days after the publishing hereof, shall lay hold upon this Our Grace and Favour, and shall by any publique Act declare their doing so and that they return to the Loyalty and Obedience of good Subjects; Excepting only such persons as shall hereafter be excepted by Parliament: Those only excepted, Let all Our Subjects, how faulty soever, rely upon the Word of a King, solemnly given by this present Declaration, That no Crime whatsoever committed against Us, or Our Royal Father before the Publication of this, shall ever rise in Judgment, or be brought in Question, against any of them, to the least Endamagement of them either in their Lives, Liberties, or Estates, or (as far forth as lies in our Power) so much as to the prejudice of their Reputations, by any reproach, or term of distinction from the rest of any of Our best Subjects; We desiring and ordaining, That henceforth all Notes of Discord, Separation, and Difference of Parties, be utterly abolished among all Our Subjects, whom We invite and conjure to a perfect Union among themselves, under Our Protection, for the resettlement of Our Just Rights and Theirs, in a Free Parliament, by which upon the Word of a King We will be advised.

And because the passion and uncharitableness of the times have produced several Opinions in Religion, by which men are engaged in Parties and Animosities against each other, which, when they shall hereafter unite in a freedom of Conversation, will be composed, or better understood; We do declare a Liberty to tender Consciences, And that no man shall be disquiet-ed or called in question for differences of Opinion in matters of Religion, which do not disturb the Peace of the Kingdom, and that We shall be ready to consent to such an Act of Parliament, as upon mature deliberation shall be offered to Us, for the full granting that Indulgence. And

‘And because in the continued distractions of ‘so many Years, and so many and great Revo‘lutions, many Grants and Purchases of Estates
‘have been made to and by many Officers, Soul-‘diers, and others, who are now possessed of ‘the same, and who may be liable to Actions
‘at Law, upon several Titles; We are likewise ‘willing that all such differences and all things ‘relating to the said Grants, Sales and Purcha‘ses, shall be determined in Parliament, which can ‘best provide for the Just satisfaction of all men ‘who are concerned.

‘And We do further declare, that We will be ‘ready to consent to any Act or Acts of Parlia- ‘ment to the purposes aforesaid, And for the full ‘satisfaction of all Arrears due to the Officers ‘and Souldiers of the Army, under the Com‘mand of General Monk, and that they shall be ‘received into our Service upon as good pay
‘and Conditions as they now enjoy.

Given under our Sign Manual and Privy Signet at our Court at Breda this 14 day of April, 1660. in the Twelfth Year of our Reign.

After the Reading of these, the Lords Ordered Thanks to be given to Sir John Greenvil, for bringing that Gracious Declaration and Letter, and Resolv’d by Vote, That they do own and de- clare, That according to the Ancient and Fundamental Laws of this Kingdom, the Government is,
and ought to be, by King, Lords, and Commons.

Sir John Greenwill came then to the House of Commons, who were before his Coming acquainted with the Letter he delivered to the Council; upon Notice of his being at the Door, he was admitted, and presented a Letter to them from his Majesty. The Letter had in it a Duplicate of the same Declaration which was inclosed in the Letter to the Lords: The Letter and it were both read, and the Letter was Superfcribed;

To Our Trusty and Well-beloved, the Speaker of the House of Commons:

CHARLES R.

His Majesties Letter to the House of Commons.

Trusty and Well-beloved, We Greet you well. ‘In these great and insupportable ‘afflictions and Calamities under which the poor ‘Nation hath been so long exercised, & by which ‘it is so near exhausted, We cannot think of a ‘more natural and proper Remedy, than to re‘sort to those for Counsel and Advice, who have ‘seen and observed the first beginning of our Mi-‘series, the Progress from bad to worse, and the ‘mistakes and mis-understandings which have ‘produced and contributed to Inconveniences
‘which were not intended, and after so many Re‘volutions, and the observation of what hath ‘attended them, are now trusted by Our good ‘Subjects to repair the Breeches which are made,
‘and to provide proper Remedies for these E‘vils, and for the lasting Peace, Happiness and ‘Security of the Kingdom.

‘We do assure you upon Our Royal Word,
‘That none of Our Predecessors have had a greater Esteem of Parliaments, than We have in Our ‘Judgment, as well as from Our Obligation; We ‘do believe them to be so vital a part of the ‘Constitution of the Kingdom, and so necessary ‘for the Government of it, that We well know ‘neither Prince nor People can be in any tolerable

‘degree happy without them: And therefore you ‘may be confident, That We shall always look ‘upon their Counsels as the best We can receive,
‘and shall be as tender of their Priviledges, and ‘as Careful to preserve and protect them, as of ‘that which is most neer to Our Self, and most ‘necessary for Our Own Preservation.

‘And as this is Our Opinion of Parliaments, ‘That their Authority is most necessary for the ‘Government of the Kingdom: So We are most ‘Confident, that You believe and find; that the ‘preservation of the Kings Authority is as neces‘sary for the preservation of Parliaments; and ‘that it is not the Name but the right Constitu‘tion of them, which can prepare and apply pro‘per Remedies for those Evils which are grie‘vous to the People, and which can thereby esta‘blish their Peace and Security. And therefore ‘We have not the least doubt, but that you will ‘be as Tender in, and as Jealous of, any thing ‘that may infringe Our Honour; or impair Our ‘Authority, as of your own Liberty and Pro‘perty; which is best preserv’d by preserving ‘the other.

‘How far We have trusted You in this great ‘Affair; and how much it is in your Power to ‘restore the Nation to all that it hath lost, and
‘and to redeem it from any Infamy it hath under‘gone, and to make King and People as happy as ‘they ought to be, You will find by Our inclosed ‘Declaration, a Copy of which We have like‘wise sent to the House of Peers; and you will ‘easily believe that We would not voluntarily;
‘and of Our Self have reposed so great a Trust in ‘you, but upon an intire Confidence that you ‘will not abuse it, and that you will proceed in ‘such a manner, and with such due consideration ‘of Us who have trusted you, that We shall not ‘be ashamed of declining other Assistance (which ‘We have assurance of) and repairing to you for ‘more natural and proper Remedies for the Evils
‘We would be freed from, nor sorry that We ‘have bound up Our Own Interest so intirely
‘with that of Our Subjects, as that We refer it ‘to the same Persons to take care of Us, who are ‘trusted to provide for them.

‘We look upon You as wise and dispassionate ‘Men, and good Patriots, who will raise up ‘those Banks and Fences which have been cast ‘down, and who will most reasonably hope, that ‘the same Prosperity will again spring from those ‘Roots from which it hath heretofore and al‘ways grown; Nor can we apprehend that you ‘will propose any thing to Us, or expect any ‘thing from Us, but that We are as ready to ‘give as you to receive.

‘If you desire the advancement and Propaga‘tion of the Protestant Religion, We have, by ‘Our constant Profession and Practice of it, gi‘ven sufficient Testimony to the World, that nei‘ther the unkindness of those of the same Faith ‘towards Us, nor the Civilities and Obligations ‘from those of a contrary Profession, (of both ‘which We have had abundant Evidence) could in 1660

'in the least degree startle Us, or make Us Swerve 'from our zeal and affection for it, to which 'We will not readily consent. And we hope in 'due time Our self to propose something to you 'for the Propagation of it, that will satisfie the 'World, that We have always made it both
'Our Care and Our Study, and have enough
'Observed what is most like to bring disadvan'tage to it.

'If you desire security for these, who in these
'Calamitous times either wilfully or weakly
'have transgressed those bounds which were pre'scribed, and have invaded each others Rights,
'We have left to you to provide for their Secu'rity and Indemnity, and in such a way as you 'shall think Just and Reasonable; And by a
'Just Computation of what men have done,
'and suffered, as near as is possible, to take care
'that all men be satisfied, which is the surest
'way to suppress and extirpate all such uncha-
'ritableness and animosity, as might hereafter
'shake and threaten that Peace which for the 'present might seem Established.

'If there be a crying Sin for which the Na'tion may be involv'd in the infamy that attends
'it, We cannot doubt but that you will be as 'solicitous to Redeem and Vindicate the Nation
'from the Guilt and Infamy, as we can be.

'If you desire that Reverence and Obedience
'may be paid to the fundamental Law of the 'Land, and that Justice may be equally and 'impartially administred to all men, it is that 'which We desire to be sworn to our Self, and 'that all Persons in Power and Authority should 'be so too.

'In a word, there is nothing which you can 'propose, that may make the Kingdom happy,
'which We will not contend with you to com-
'pass; and upon this Confidence and Assurance,
'We have thought fit to send you this Declara'tion, that you may, as much as is possible, at 'this distance, see Our heart, which when God 'shall bring Us nearer together (as we hope he 'will do shortly) will appear to you very agree'able to what We have professed; and We hope 'that We have made that right Christian Use
'of Our Affliction, and that the Observation
'and experience We have had in other Coun'tries, hath been such, as that We, and We hope
'all Our Subjects, shall be the better for what 'We have seen and suffered.

'We shall add no more, but our Prayers to 'Almighty God, that He will so bless your Coun-
'sels, and direct your endeavours, that his Glory
'and Worship may be provided for, and the 'Peace, Honour and Happiness of the Nation,
'may be established upon those foundations
'which can best support it. And so we bid you
'farewell.

Given at Our Court at Breda, this 14 day of April, 1660. In the twelfth Year of Our Reign.

After the reading of this Letter and the Declaration, his Excellency the Lord General desired the Letter that was directed to him, to be Communicated to the Council and the Army, might also be read, which was agreed. In that Letter there was also the former Declaration inclosed, and the Address of the Letter was:

To Our Trusty and Well-beloved General Monk, to be by him Communicated to the President and Council of State, and to the Officers of the Armies under his Command.

CHARLES R.

'Trusty and Well-beloved, We greet you His Majesties
'well: It cannot be believ'd, but that We Letter to the
'have been, are, and ever must be, as solicitous as General, to be
'We can, by all endeavours to improve the af- communicated
'fections of Our good Subjects at home, and to to the Officers
'procure the assistance of Our Friends and Allies of the Army,
'abroad, for the recovery of that Right, which and Council
'by the Laws of God and Man is unquestionable, of State,
'and of which We have been so long disposses-
'sed by such force, and with those Circumstan'ces, as We do not desire to aggravate by any
'sharp expressions, but rather wish, that the me'mory of what is passed, may be buried to the 'World. That We have more endeavoured to 'prepare, and to improve the Affections of Our 'Subjects at home, for Our Restauration, than
'to procure Assistance from abroad, to invade 'either of Our Kingdoms, is as manifest to the 'World: And We cannot give a better Evi'dence, that We are still of the same mind,
'than in this Conjunction when common reason
'must satisfie all men, that We cannot be with'out Assistance from abroad, We chose rather 'to send to you, who have it in your own power
'to prevent that ruine and desolation which a 'War would bring upon the Nation, and to 'make the whole Kingdom owe the Peace, Hap'piness, Security, and Glory it shall enjoy to 'your Vertue; and to acknowledg that your 'Armies have complied with their Obligations
'for which they were first raised, for the prefer-
'vation of the Protestant Religion, the Honour
'and Dignity of the King, the Priviledges of 'Parliament, the Liberty and Property of the 'Subject, and the fundamental Laws of the Land;
'and that you have vindicated that Trust, which
'others most perfidiously abused and betrayed.

'How much We desire and Resolve to con'tribute to those good ends, will appear to you
'by Our enclosed Declaration, which We desire
'you to cause to be published for the Informati'on and Satisfaction of all good Subjects, who 'do not desire a further effusion of precious Chri'stian Blood, but to have their Peace and Secu'rity founded upon that which can only support
'it; an Unity of Affections amongst our selves;
'an equal administration of Justice to men, re'storing Parliaments to a full Capacity of pro'viding for all that is amiss, and the Laws of the 'Land to their due veneration.

'You have been your selves witnesses of so 'many Revolutions, and have had so much ex'perience, how far any Power and Authority
'that is only assum'd by Passion and Appetite,
'and not supported by Justice, is from providing 'for the happiness and peace of the People, or
'from receiving any obedience from them, with'out which no Government can provide for 'them; and that you may very reasonably be'lieve, that God hath not been so well pleased 'with the attempts that have been made, since he 'hath usually increased the confusion, by giving
'all the success that hath been desired, and brought

‘brought that to pass without effect, which the ‘designers have propos’d as the best means to ‘settle and Compose the Nation: And therefore ‘We cannot but hope and believe, that you will ‘concur with us in the Remedy, We have ap‘plied, which to humane understanding, is only ‘proper for the ills We all groan under; and that ‘you will make your selves the Blessed Instru‘ments to bring this Blessing of Peace and Re‘conciliation upon King and People; it being the ‘usual method in which Divine Providence de‘lighteth it self, to use and sanctifie those very ‘means which ill men design for the satisfaction ‘of private and particular ends and ambition,
‘and other wicked purposes, to wholesome and ‘publick ends, and to establish that good which ‘is most contrary to the designers: which is the ‘greatest manifestation of Gods particular kind‘ness to a Nation that can be given in this world.
‘How far we resolve to preserve your Interests ‘and reward your Services, We refer to Our ‘Declaration, And we hope God will inspire you ‘to perform your duty to Us, and to your Na‘tive Countrey, whose happiness cannot be se‘parated from each other.

‘We have intrusted Our Well-beloved Servant ‘Sir John Greenville, one of the Gentlemen of Our ‘Bed-Chamber, to deliver this unto you, and to ‘give us an accompt of your reception of it, and ‘to desire you, that it may be published. And so ‘we bid you farewell.

Given at our Court at Breda this 14 of April, 1660. in the Twelfth Year of our Reign.

After the reading of these Letters, his Excellency desired their permission to answer it, and to Communicate that his Majesties Declaration to the Officers of the Army; which was readily consented to.

The Parliament present his Majesty and his two Brothers, with the sum of 65000 l.

And then they took into their Consideration,
That his Majesty having been deprived of his Revenue, could not but be in want of Monies; and therefore Ordered, That the Summ of fifty Thousand pounds should be presently raised and presented to his Majesty from that House, and ten Thousand pounds to his Royal Highness the Duke of York, and five Thousand pounds to the Duke of Gloucester.

The Lords sent down a Message to the Commons, with the Vote of Recognition formerly mentioned, which was agreed to, and each of the Houses appointed Committees to draw up their several Answers to his Majesties Letters, and Resolv’d that the Supercription should be,

To the King’s most Excellent Majesty.

And the Commons Ordered, That all the Journals should be search’d, and those Acts and Orders razed out, which were inconsistent with the Government of King, Lords and Commons; These were the chiefest Transactions in Parliament that day.

Col. Lydcot’s Speech upon the reading of his Majesties Letter and Declaration.

In the Evening his Excellency summoned all his Officers that were in and near the City, and Communicated to them his Majesties Letter and Declaration; upon the reading whereof, Colonel Lydcot first spake; addressing himself to his Excellency then present; He said, They were all bound to bless God for the happiness of that day, which made them Witnesses of his Majesties great goodness and clemency to all his Subjects expressed in that Declaration, and for his particular kindness to them manifested in his most gracious Letter.

1660

He said, It was most true that they had been Witnesses of many Revolutions (as it is therein expressed) and experienced to their sorrow the incon-veniencies of them; That at the beginning of the Wars, the safety of the Kings Person, Protestant Religion, Priviledges of Parliament, and Liberty of the Subjects, were Principles that many good men with them thought they might safely engage for, but by degrees after they came into Blood, some implacable Spirits improved their Successes to make the divisions irreparable, and many men were forc’d to continue their Arms, more for their own security than the Justice of them: But that which was his comfort, and ought to be all theirs, was, That they had now by the Prudence of their ever to be honoured General, the opportunity to comply with the Obligations for which they were first raised, and they were these whom his Majesty was pleas’d to own in their submission to his most Just and Lawful Authority, to be the Instruments to bring the blessing of Peace and Reconciliation upon the King and People.

This Speech was approv’d by all them that heard it; but Colonel Knight desired they might give some written Testimony of their acknowledgments of his Majesties Authority over them, to be presented to his Excellency the Lord General; That since his Majesties Letter was by him communicated to them, he might in his Answer to it, return their humble sense of it.

This motion produc’d a Reference to a Committee of Officers, to draw up an Address to his Excellency, in Compliance with his Majesties Letter and Declaration, to be prepared against six of the clock the next morning, and to desire his Excellencies leave, that they might then meet to give their Consents, and subscribe their names to it; which his Excellency readily approved.
And the next morning, the Address being prepared, was read to the Council of Officers, and Signed by them, and presented to his Excellency.

The Title was,

To his Excellency the Lord General Monk, Captain General of all the Armies and Forces in England, Scotland and Ireland, and one of the Generals at Sea.

The humble Address of the Officers of your Excellencies Army, in the Name of themselves and their Brethren.

‘Although we cannot doubt of your Excel‘lencies Confidence in our affections, and ‘our Faithfulness to your Excellency, and that ‘Discipline which by your good and prudent ‘Conduct, hath been exercised over us, whereby ‘we are instructed to an intire Obedience to your ‘Excellency, and that Authority which the Lord ‘shall place over Us, which we hope we have ‘manifested in our last Actions under your Ex‘cellency, against all persons whatsoever, in ‘any ways disturbing the Peace and Settlement ‘of the Nations; although some of them have been our Brethren formerly engaged in the same Cause with Us. As also in our late Remonstrance and Address to your Excellency, wherein, as it becomes Us in Duty, we have solemnly declared to acquiesce in what the Lord shall bring forth from the Consultations of this present Parliament.

Yet in regard your Excellency hath been pleased to communicate to Us, a Letter and Declaration from the Kings Majesty, full of gracious Expressions, we cannot but acknowledge, that the matter of it gives a great measure of quiet to our minds, and more than ordinary expectations of the enjoyment of much tranquillity and happiness under His Majesties Government.

The free and general Indempnity offered by his Majesty, with a liberty to tender Consciences, satisfaction of Arrears, his readiness to consent to a Confirmation of Sales, and other Grants and Purchases of Estates to all Persons now in possession of the same, is that of which we cannot doubt of the real performance, being left by His Majesty to the Parliaments determination; so we believe it is the most probable way to bring the Nations to their desired Settlement. And we hope to evince to his Majesty, and all the world, That we are his Majesties Loyal Subjects, and that your Excellency, and the Armies under your Command, have Complied with the Obligations, for which they were first raised, for the preservation of the true Protestant Religion, the Honour and Dignity of the King, the Priviledges of Parliament, the Liberty and Prosperity of the Subject, and the Fundamental Laws of the Land.

It is read by the Commons, and approved.

In the morning, at the first sitting of the Commons-House, the General acquainted them, that he had communicated his Majesties Letter, and the Declaration in it enclosed, to the Officers of the Army; and that thereupon they had presented an Address to him, which he desired they would be pleased to read, which was ordered, and after the reading, it was well approved of.

Commissary Clarges appointed by the General to wait upon his Majesty with this Address.

His Excellency then told them, He intended to prepare a Letter, to be sent to his Majesty, and did with their leave, purpose to send that Address to him, that his Majesty might thereby perceive, the Armies were at his devotion; and designing to send it by Commissary Clarges, who was as well a Member of their House, as an Officer of the Army, he requested their permission for him to go.

The House then Ordered, he should have leave to go from his Excellency to the King; and they gave five hundred Pounds to Sir John Greenville, to buy him a Jewel, as a Testimony, of the Respects of the House to him.

After this, Alderman Robinson inform'd them, That the said Sir John Greenville, with the Lord Mordant, had presented a Letter from his Majesty, to the Lord Mayor and Aldermen, and they Commanded him to ask their leave to return an Answer to it. Which after the reading it in the House was granted; In that Letter also his Majesties Declaration was inclosed: The Letter it self was directed,

To Our Trusty and Well-beloved, the Lord Major, Aldermen, and the Common-Council of Our City of London.

CHARLES R.

Trusty and Well-beloved, We greet you well: His Majesties Letter to the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of the City of London. In these great Revolutions of late hapned in that Our Kingdom, to the Wonder and Amazement of all the World, there is none that We have looked upon with more Comfort, than the so frequent and publick manifestations of their affections to Us in the City of London, which hath exceedingly raised Our Spirits, and which no doubt hath proceeded from the Spirit of God, and his extraordinary mercy to the Nation, which hath been encouraged by you, and your good Example, to assert that Government, under which it hath so many hundred years enjoyed as great felicity as any Nation in Europe, and to discountenance the Imaginations of those, who would subject Our Subjects to a Government they have not yet devised; and to satisfy the Pride and Ambition of a few ill men, would introduce the most arbitrary and tyrannical Power that was ever yet heard of. How long we have all suffered under those and the like devices, all the World takes notice, to the no small reproach of the English Nation, which We hope is now providing for its own Security and Redemption, and will be no longer bewitch'd by those Inventions: How desirous We are to contribute to the obtaining the Peace and Happiness of Our Subjects without effusion of blood; and how far we are from desiring to recover what belongs to Us by a War, if it can be otherwise done, will appear to you by the inclosed Declaration, which together with this Our Letter, We have intrusted Our Right Trusty and Well-beloved Cousin, the Lord Viscount Mordant, and Our Trusty and Well-beloved Servant, Sir John Greenville Knight, one of the Gentlemen of Our Bed-Chamber, to deliver to you; to the end, that you, and all the rest of Our good Subjects of that Our City of London (to whom We desire it should be published) may know how far We are from the desire of revenge, or that the Peace, Happiness, and Security of the Kingdom, should be raised upon any other Foundation than the affection and hearts of Our Subjects, and their own Consents. We have not the least doubt of your just sense of these Our Condescensions, or of your zeal to advance and promote the same good end, by disposing all men to meet Us with the same affection and tenderness, in restoring the Fundamental Laws to that Reverence that is due to them, and upon the preservation whereof all Our happiness depends. And you will have no reason to doubt of enjoying your full share in that happiness, and of the improving it by Our particular Affection to you. It is very natural for all men to do all the good they can for their native Countrey, and to advance the Honour of it: And as We have that full affection for the Kingdom in general, so We would not be thought to be without some extraordinary Kindness for Our Native City in that particular, which We shall manifest on all occasions, not only by renewing their Charter, and confirming all those Priviledges, which they have received from Our Predecessours, but by adding and granting any new Favours, which may advance the Trade Trade, Wealth and Honour of that Our Native City, for which We will be so solicitous, that We doubt not but that it will in due time receive some benefit and advantage in all those respects, even from Our own Observation and Experience abroad. And We are most confident, We shall never be disappointed in Our Expectation, of all possible Service from your Affections; and so We bid you farewell. Given at Our Court at Breda, the 14 day of April, 1660. In the Twelfth Year of Our Reign.

We must not omit to commemorate the Cities joyful Resentment of this Letter, and the Declaration in it, expressed by the Grateful Duty of the Common-Council; who immediately upon the reading of them, ordered ten thousand pounds to be presented to his Majesty, a thousand pounds to the Duke of York, and a thousand pounds to the Duke of Gloucester; and that Alderman Langham, Alderman Reynaldson, Alderman Brown, Alderman Thompson, Alderman Frederick, Alderman Wale, Alderman Adams, Alderman Bateman, Alderman Robinson, Mr. Recorder Wild, Sir Nicholas Crisp, Mr. Vincent, Mr. Bidolph, Mr. Foord, Mr. Bloodworth, Sir James Bunce, Mr. Lewis, and Mr. William Bateman, should from that City attend his Majesty, with a Presentment of their most Dutiful Acknowledgments for his Clemency and Goodness towards them. His Excellency took care, that the Address presented to him by the Officers, together with Copies of the Kings Letter and Declaration, should be sent to all the Regiments and Garrisons in England, Scotland, Ireland, and Dunkirk; requiring all to return their Subscriptions to him, and the Names of Dissenters (if any were.) But it appeared by the Returns made, that the Army was so well purged by the Remonstrance that went before, that all readily and dutifully comply'd with this.

The Lords House nominated the Earls of Oxford, Warwick, and Middlesex, and the Lord Viscount Hereford, the Lord Brook, and the Lord Berkley, to attend his Majesty from that House; and the Commons appointed the Lord Fairfax, Lord Bruce, Lord Falkland, Lord Castleton, Lord Herbert of Worcester, Lord Mandeville, Sir Horatio Townesend, Sir Anthony Ashley-Cooper, Sir George Booth, Sir John Holland, Sir Henry Cholmley, and Denzell Hollis Esquire, to attend his Majesty from that House; who were ordered to make the quickest preparation they could for their Journey, to desire his Majesty to make a speedy return to his Parliament, to the Exercise of his Kingly Office.

His Majesties Letter and Declaration to the Fleet, by the diligence of General Mountague, had the same success there, as that in the Army, being gratefully received by all the Commanders and Sea-men.

The Letter it self was in these words:

CHARLES R.

Trusty and Well-beloved, We greet you well: It is no small comfort to us, after so long and great Troubles and Miseries which the whole Nation hath groaned under; and after so great Revolutions, which have still increased those Miseries, to hear that the Fleet and Ships, which are the Walls of the Kingdom, are put under the Command of two Persons so well disposed to, and concerned in the Peace and Happiness of the Kingdom, as we believe you to be; and that the Officers and Sea-men under your Command, are more inclined to return to their Duty to Us, and put a period to these Distempers and Distractions which have so impoverished and dishonoured the Nation, than to widen the Breach, and to raise their Fortunes by Rapine and Violence; which gives Us great encouragement and hope, that God Almighty will heal the Wounds by the same Plaister that made the Flesh Raw; that he will proceed in the same method, in pouring his Blessings upon Us, which he was pleased to use when he began to afflict Us; and that the Manifestation of the good Affection of the Fleet and Sea-men towards us, and the Peace of the Nation, may be the Prologue to that Peace which was first interrupted by the mistake and misunderstanding of their Predecessors, which would be such a Blessing upon Us all, that We should not be less delighted with the manner, than the matter of it: In this Hope and Confidence, We have sent the inclosed Declaration to You, by which you may discern how much We are willing to contribute towards the obtaining the General and Publique Peace: In which, as no man can be more, or so much concern'd; so no man can be more solicitous for it. And We do earnestly desire you, that you will cause the said Declaration to be published to all the Officers and Sea-men of the Fleet; to the end, that they may plainly discern, how much We have put it into their Power, to provide for the Peace and Happiness of the Nation, who have been always understood by them, to be the best and most proper Counsellors for those good Ends. And You are likewise further to declare to them, That We have the same Gracious Purpose towards them, which We have expressed towards the Army at Land; and will be as ready to provide for the payment of all Arrears due to them, and for rewarding them according to their several Merits, as We have expressed to the other; and We will always take so particular a care of them, and their condition, as shall manifest Our kindness towards them. And so depending upon Gods Blessing, for infusing those good Resolutions into your and their Hearts, which are best for Us all, We bid you farewell. Given at Our Court at Breda, this 14 day of April, 1660. in the Twelfth Year of Our Reign.

Superscribed,

To Our Trusty and Well-beloved General Monck, and General Mountague, Generals at Sea: To be communicated to the Fleet.

Clarges on the fifth day of May began his Journey to his Majesty; and at his parting from the General, he gave him no other Instructions, but to give the King all manner of Assurance of his Fidelity to him, and his Resolution to improve all his Opportunities to his Service: desiring him

1660. him not to move any thing to his Majesty, either for himself, or him, or any other in his Company, That his Majesty might see that both he, and those so nearly concern'd with him in his Restauration, sought more the Publique Good of their Country, than their own private Honour or Profit: which he did faithfully observe at that time, and ever after. And three days after the Lords and Commons having agreed upon a Proclamation to that purpose, his Majesty was proclaimed with great Solemnity in the Cities of London and Westminster, the Lords and Commons, and the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of London being present; the manner was as followeth:

The Solemn manner of proclaiming his Majesty in London and Westminster.

The Lords came out of their House into the Painted-Chamber, where they continued till they were placed in Order; the Earl of Manchester first, then the Duke of Buckingham, the Earl of Oxford, &c. Thus they walked out along with the Heralds before them, through the Court of Requests, and Westminster-Hall, to the Palace, where they staid before the Hall-Gate, whilst Mr. Bish, one of the Heralds, and Mr. Ryly that officiated as King at Arms, with a loud Voice, proclaimed the King in these words.

Although it can no way be doubted, but that His Majesties Right and Title to his Crown and Kingdoms, is, and was every way compleated by the Death of His most Royal Father of Glorious Memory, without the Ceremony or Solemnity of a Proclamation: Yet since Proclamations in such cases have always been used, to the end that all good Subjects might, upon this occasion, testify their Duty and Respect; And since the Armed Violence, and other the Calamities of many years last past, have hitherto deprived Us of any such Opportunity, wherein we might express our Loyalty and Allegiance to his Majesty; We therefore, the Lords and Commons now Assembled in Parliament, together with the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Common-Council of the City of London, and other Free-men of this Kingdom now present, do, according to Our Duty and Allegiance, heartily, joyfully, and unanimously acknowledge and proclaim, That upon the Decease of Our late Sovereign Lord King Charles, the Imperial Crown of the Realm of England, and of all the Kingdoms, Dominions, and Rights belonging to the same, did by Inherent Birth-right, and lawful and undoubted Succession, descend and come to his most Excellent Majesty CHARLES the Second; as being Lineally, Justly, and Lawfully next Heir of the Royal Blood of this Realm; And that by the Goodness and Providence of Almighty GOD, He is of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, the most Potent, Mighty, and Undoubted King: And thereunto we most humbly and faithfully do submit, and oblige Our Selves, our Heirs and Posterities.

The Proclamation being ended, the Lords and Commons took their Coaches, and proceeded in this Order; First, the Head-Bayliff of Westminster, and his Servants, did ride along with white Staffs to prepare the way; Then followed a gallant Troop of the Officers of the Army, and other Gentlemen, with Trumpets before them; Then the Life-Guard, commanded by Captain

Philip Howard, very well mounted, and richly cloath'd; after them a Class of Trumpets, and three Heralds; then a Herald between the Serjeant to the Commons, and the Mace of the Council; Next, Ryly King at Arms, in a rich Coat of the Kings Arms, betwixt Serjeant Norfolk, and Serjeant Middleton; after whom came the Usher of the Black-Rod, and Mr. Bish. These thus Ushering the way, the Earl of Manchester followed in his Coach and six Horses, the Speaker of the House of Commons in his, then his Excellency General Monck in his; after which followed both Houses of Parliament in Coaches, and after them a Troop of Horse: in this manner they came to White-Hall, where they proclaimed his Majesty a second time; and then proceeded to Temple-Bar, where the Gates being shut, the King at Arms, with Trumpets before him, knocked, and demanded entrance: The Lord Mayor appointed some to ask, Who it was that knock'd? The King at Arms reply'd, That if they would open the Wicket, and let the Lord Mayor come thither, he would to him deliver his Message. The Lord Mayor came then on Horseback richly habited, in a Crimson-Velvet Gown, to the Gate, and then the Trumpets sounded; and after silence being made, Alderman Bateman, by order of the Lord Mayor, demanded of the Herald, Who he was, and what was his Message? To which he answer'd, with his Hat on, We are the Heralds at Arms, appointed and commanded by the Lords and Commons assembled in Parliament, to demand Entrance into the Famous City of London, to proclaim Charles the Second King of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, and we expect your speedy Answer to this Demand. To which, after a little consultation amongst themselves, Alderman Bateman answered, Their Message was accepted, and the Gates should be immediately opened; which was done accordingly.

The King at Arms entred first, Trumpets sounding before him, and was joyfully received by the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Sheriffs, and all the Officers of the City Militia gallantly accoutred, both sides of the streets were lin'd by the Trained-bands of London, from Temple-Bar to the Old-Exchange, who stood all with their Swords drawn: The City-Troop march'd next to the Life-guard, then the Lord Mayor and Aldermen; after whom the Heralds, and the rest, as before: When they came to Chancery-lane end, they proclaim'd his Majesty a third time: And from thence they march'd to Cheap-side, where he was proclaim'd a fourth time; and from thence to the Old-Exchange, where he was again proclaim'd. The shouts and acclamations of the people, at this gallant and orderly Procession, were very great, and their demonstrations of joy, at the several Stations, when the Ceremony of proclaiming was performing, not to be expressed; sometimes they lookt upwards, and then presently cast their eyes towards the General, as if they intended at one time to pay a Tribute of Thankfulness to Heaven, and his Excellency, who had done an action so glorious and transcendent; that this present Age cannot but admire, and our Posterity will with difficulty believe: And then again they cry'd out, God save King Charles the Second; as if they acknowledged that days joy, as a recompence sufficient sufficient for all their Pressures and Grievances; so excellent a Tutor is the want of that, which long Fruition makes us imperfectly understand.

The Guns from the Tower were all shot off, and all the Streets that Evening were fill'd with Bone-fires, and the Air with the sound of ringing of Bells; and all seem'd too little to celebrate the content and exultation of the people, at that days Solemnity.

Commissary Clarges his arrival at Breda, where he is graciously received by his Majesty.

Commissary Clarges made such speed in his journey to his Majesty, that on Tuesday the 8th of May in the morning, which was the day after the happy making of this Proclamation, he arrived at Bergen-ap-Zome in Holland, half a days journey from Breda: There the Governor gave him a very Honourable Reception, and accommodated him with his Coach and six Horses to Breda; and a League before he came to the Town, the Lord Gerrard met him with two Coaches and six Horses, and accompanied him to his Majesty, who received him with most Gracious Expressions of satisfaction, as well that he was the first Authorized Messenger, that came to him with the News of the intire Submission of his Kingdoms and Army to his Obedience; as for his Relation to that most Renowned General, from whose prudent Conduct and Courage principally, all that Happiness was derived to his Majesty, and his People.

He presented to his Majesty a Letter from the General, in Answer to his Majesties sent before to him; and in it was inclosed the Address of the Officers of the Army.

May it please your Majesty,

The Generals Letter to his Majesty.

THE Parliament being Sitting at my receipt of your Majesties gracious Letter to me, I thought my self obliged in duty to present it to the House of Commons, whose sense of it, and of that other your Majesty was pleased to send to them by Sir John Greenville, I doubt not but your Majesty will receive an account of by some of their own Members: I have also communicated your Majesties Letter and Declaration to as many of the Chief Officers of the Army as were present in or about London, who resented your Majesties Clemency and Grace to them with very great Duty and Affection, as your Majesty may perceive in the inclosed Address, which within few hours after their Convention, they delivered to me.

By all which circumstances, I hope I may assure your Majesty, That as the Army hath been very Instrumental in their Endeavours to further the Settlement, Peace and Prosperity of your Majesties Kingdoms and Dominions; so nothing will be dearer to them and me, than to be found in our Generations pursuing those good Ends, which may render us serviceable and acceptable to our Country, to give unto Caesar the things that are Caesars, and to God the things which are Gods.

May the 5th.

May it please your Majesty,
Your Majesties most humble, and Obedient Servant and Subject, George Monck.

This Letter was dictated by his Excellency in the presence of many Officers of the Army; but he writ another short Letter with his own hand: Wherein he acquainted his Majesty, That he chose to send Mr. Clarges to him, because he was the only Person he trusted in the nearest Concernments and Consultations for his Restauration, as one to whom he desired his Majesty to give Credit to what he should say on that behalf.

1660.

After the reading of these Letters, and the Address inclosed in the former of them, his Majesty Knighted him, and by many kind expressions demonstrated his sense of his Merit and Service to him; and after he had been about an hour with his Majesty, he had his permission to attend his Royal Highness the Duke of York, and the Duke of Gloucester, who received him with that affability which was inherent in them, the most accomplished and most generous Princes in the world. From them he waited on the Princess of Orange, who expressed great content at his Relation of the News he brought; and at his parting from her, she gave order he should with his whole Retinue be entertained at her Charge whilst he staid in Breda, and have a Coach and six Horses of her Highnesses, with Equipage suitable, to wait on him when he should give order for it. He went then to visit the Lord Chancellor, and from him the Marquess of Ormond, as those deservedly (next the Royal Family) in greatest Credit with his Majesty; both of them receiving him with that respect, as the import and relation of his Message and Person did deserve.

Clarges Knighted by his Majesty, presents himself to the two Dukes, the Princess Royal, and others of the most Eminent of the Court.

The Two Houses of Parliament having perfected the Instructions for their Commissioners, and the Letter to his Majesty, they were delivered to them, and they began their Journey towards the Hague (at which place his Majesty intended to meet them) on the 11th of May, the time prefix'd in the Instructions for their Journey.

Instructions for Aubry Earl of Oxford, Charles Earl of Warwick, Lionel Earl of Middlesex, Lycester Viscount Hereford, George Lord Berkley, Robert Lord Brook; the Lord Herbert, the Lord Mandivel, the Lord Bruce, the Lord Castletowne, the Lord Falkland, the Lord Fairfax, Denzel Holles Esquire, Sir Horatio Townsend, Sir John Holland, Sir Anthony Ashley-Cooper, Sir George Booth, Sir Henry Cholmley.

The Instructions were thus; (Viz.)

YOU are to begin your Journey towards his Majesty on Friday next, and make a speedy repair to such place where his Majesty shall be, and humbly to present the Letters where with you are respectively intrusted by both Houses of Parliament.

The Parliaments Instructions to their Commissioners, who were sent to wait upon his Majesty.

You are to acquaint his Majesty with what great Joy and Acclamation he was proclaimed in and about the Cities of London and Westminster, upon the eighth day of May instant, and present the Proclamation it self to his Majesty, and to acquaint him with the Orders of both Houses to have the same proclaimed throughout the Kingdoms of England and Ireland, and the Dominion of Wales, and the Town of Berwick upon Tweed.

And

1660.

And that both Houses have Ordered,

That all and every the Ministers throughout the Kingdoms of England and Ireland, be joyned in their Publick Prayers to pray for his Most Excellent Majesty, and for the most Illustrious Prince James Duke of York, and the rest of the Royal Progeny. And also have ordered, That the assumed Arms of the late pretended Commonwealth, where-ever they are standing, be taken down; and that his Majesties Arms be set up instead thereof: And you are to communicate to his Majesty the Resolution of both Houses relating to these Instructions.

You are to acquaint his Majesty with the earnest desire of both Houses, that his Majesty will be pleased to make a speedy return to his Parliament, and to the Exercise of his Kingly Office; and that in order thereunto, both Houses have given direction to General Mountague, one of the Generals at Sea, and other Officers of the Fleet, to observe such Commands as his Majesty shall please to give him or them for disposal of the Fleet, in order to his Majesties return: And you are to communicate to his Majesty the resolution of both Houses relating to this Instruction.

John Brown, Cl. Parl.

The House of Commons added one more Instruction to the Commissioners; which was, To beseech his Majesty, that the Parliament may know where he purposeth to take Shipping, and to Land at his coming over, that preparation may be made for his Reception; and which of his Majesties Houses he intended to make use of at his first coming to London; And whether he will come all the way by Land after he comes on Shore, or whether he will please to come by Water from Graves-End to London? And that his Majesty will declare in what manner he is pleased to be Received.

The Parliament and City-Commissioners have their Audience from his Majesty at the Hague.

All these Commissioners in three days after their departure from London, arrived at the Hague; And on Wednesday the sixteenth of May, our Stile, they had their several Audiences by his Majesty, who received them all with a sweet and serene Countenance, and a Heart full of content and good inclinations towards them; and all the City Commissioners were Knighted by him. He gave that Evening his Dispatch to Sir Thomas Clarges, and Commanded him to acquaint the General, He intended to take Shipping at the Bay of Scheveling on Monday after, and to Sayl to Dover, and Land there; from whence he would immediately go to Canterbury, and stay there some time to determine of the manner of his Entrance into London. The Fleet was some days before in pursuance of the Orders of both Houses in the said Bay.

Sir Thomas Clarges returns with intimation of his Majesties Resolution.

On Thursday early in the Morning, Sir Thomas Clarges attempted by Boat from Scheveling, to get on Board the Admiral, but the Weather was so stormy he could not do it, till towards the Evening; And then General Mountague ordered the Norwich Frigate for his Transportation: The Winds were so contrary, and the Weather so stormy, that the Pilot could not make any Land in England till Monday morning, at which time he Landed at Aldbrough in Suffolk, and immediately from thence sent an Express to the General, and the Speaker of the House of Commons, with intimation of his Majesties Resolutions: Whereupon his Excellency with a great and gallant Company of the chiefest of the Nobility and Gentry of England, set forward from London the 22th of May; and for the more conveniency of Quartering so numerous a Company, he advis'd them to divide themselves into Troops according to the several Counties, and the interest of the Noble-men present.

At Rocheſter Sir Thomas Clarges met the General, and presented unto him his Majesties Letter, with Royal and most indear'd Assurances of Esteem from the Best of Kings, to the Worthiest and most deserving of Subjects. The Letter was dated the 26th of May. Directed,

To Our Trusty and Well-beloved General Monck, to be communicated to the Officers of the Army.

CHARLES R.

Trusty and Well-beloved, We Greet you well. You will easily believe that your His Majesties Letter to the General. Letter of the fifth of this Moneth, by Sir Thomas Clarges, was very welcom to us: And that as we must always acknowledge the infinite Mercy of God Almighty in disposing the Hearts of the Army in such an intire obedience to you, for the promoting and carrying on Our Service, and the Peace of the Kingdom; So We can never be without a Just Esteem of such a great and well-disciplin'd Army, upon which the Eyes of the World are so much fixed. We must desire you to return Our very hearty Thanks to the Officers and Souldiers for their Affection and Obedience to Us; and to assure them from Us, that we shall always have an intire Confidence in them, and ever acknowledge them to be the great Instruments of restoring Us to Peace, and Happiness, and security to Us all: And therefore they may not only with all imaginable confidence assure themselves, that We will punctually perform whatever We have promised to them in Our Declaration or Letter, but that We will take them into Our particular Care and Protection. And if the Licence and distemper of the Time shall so far transport any men, as to presume upon memory of former Animosities, and of what is past, to use any reproaches towards them, We will look upon such Persons as Disturbers of the Peace and Security of the Kingdom, and shall cause them to be prosecuted accordingly. And towards this Settlement and Composure, and for the prevention of many inconveniencies which may fall out, We think nothing so necessary as Our Presence with you, by which (in a very short time) every Member of the Army, who shall faithfully adhere to you in advancement of the Publick Peace, shall with the Blessing of God, find himself secured and provided for, to his satisfaction. And longing for that blessed time, We bid you heartily farewell.

His Excellency being in his Journey, had no opportunity to communicate this Letter to any any more of his Officers than those that were present with him.

But the Fame of his Majesties transcendent Vertues had prevented this written discovery of them, and made indelible impressions of duty and affection in the Army.

The King intended to have taken shipping on Monday, but the Crossness of the Winds forc'd him a little to defer it. His Royal Highness the Duke of York, went on Monday and Tuesday to the Fleet, to take Charge thereof as Lord High Admiral: And on Wednesday the 23 his Sacred Majesty, the Queen of Bohemia, the Princess Royal of Orange, the Dukes of York and Gloucester, and the Prince of Orange, went on board the Naseby, (which his Majesty now named the Royal Charles) where after a Re-past, The Queen of Bohemia, the Princess Royal, and the Prince of Orange her Son, took leave of his Majesty, and then the Fleet set sail for England: His Royal Highness the Duke of York came in the London; and the Duke of Gloucester in the Swiftsure, now called the James.

The King and the Dukes take Shipping for England.

His Majesties Entertainment from the States of Holland.

During the time his Majesty had remain'd at the Hague, and all the way thither from Breda, the States of Holland entertain'd him with great Magnificence; and at his departure they presented him with a rich Bed, of the Value of Seven Thousand pounds Sterling; and as much Linnen as was valued at a Thousand pounds.

On Friday about three of the Clock in the Morning, the Fleet was in sight of Dover, where-upon an Express was sent to the General (then newly come to Canterbury) to haste to Dover; which he presently did, and about ten of the Clock came thither.

His Excellency before he came from Canterbury, advising with the Earl of Lindsey, and some of the other Noble-men that accompanied him, about the conveniency of his Majesties stay at Dover, was informed that he could have no accommodation there for a fourth part of his Train, and those that came to wait on him, and therefore he resolv'd humbly to move him, at his Landing, to proceed on directly to Canterbury.

His Majesty Lands at Dover.

About One in the Afternoon, his Majesty Landed at the Beech near Dover-Peer, with the Duke of York, and the Duke of Gloucester, and many Noble-men and Gentlemen. All that were present put themselves into Posture, to see the Meeting of the King and the General: The Admirers of Majesty, were Jealous on his Majesties Behalf, of too low Condescension; and the Lovers of Duty fearful on the other Side, of an Ostentation of Merit: But such an humble Prostration was made by the General, and so generous a Reception by his Majesty, kissing and embracing him, that all Parties were satisfied, to admiration. And his Excellency from that time received so great an Impression of the marvellous Goodness of his Majesty, that he resolv'd what before he had perform'd out of bounden Duty to his Liege-Lord, should be for ever continued with the same observance, out of Loyal Affections to his Gracious Sovereign.

His Reception there.

His Majesty walked from the Water-side, towards the Town, with the General, a Canopy being carried over his Head, and a Chair of State by him; and upon his Excellencies Motion, for his going to Canterbury, for the Reasons before expressed, he hasted to his Coach; in his Passage to which, he was met by the Major and Aldermen of the Town, with Mr. Reading their Minister, who presented his Majesty with a large Bible, with Gold Clasps: At one end of the Coach next the King, sat the Duke of York, and at the other the Duke of Gloucester, and the General; and the Duke of Buckingham sat in the Boot. About two miles from Dover, his Majesty took Horse, his Royal Brothers rode on his right hand, and the General on his left; After whom the Duke of Buckingham, and several other Noble-men and Gentlemen follow'd in gallant Equipage.

At his Majesties Entrance into Canterbury, he was met by the Mayor and Aldermen, and Mr. Lovelace the Recorder, who made an eloquent Speech to him; the Mayor also presented him with a Tankard of Massie Gold, and then conducted him to the Palace, where he remained till Monday.

His Reception at Canterbury.

The next Day after his Arrival at Canterbury, his Majesty Dignified his Excellency with the Honour of the Garter; he was brought up to the King by the Earl of Winchelsea, and the Lord Mordant, who were both Knighted with him; and his Royal Highness the Duke of York, and the Duke of Gloucester, in great Testimony of Respect to him, assisted at the Ceremony, and put on the Garter, and the George; Mr. Morrice was also Knighted, and Declared Secretary of State; and that Evening his Majesty sent the General a Warrant to be Master of his Horse.

His Majesty confers the Order of the Garter, upon the General, and the Honour of Knight-hood upon the Earl of Winchelsea, the Lord Mordant and divers others.

His Majesty likewise at Canterbury, confer'd the Honour of Knighthood on Major-General Massey, Alderman Robinson, Mr. Daniel Harvey, Mr. Thomas Stewkley, Colonel Rossiter, Captain Philip Howard, and Mr. Robert Paston. Moreover, his Excellency, the Earl of Southampton, and Mr. Secretary Morrice, were Sworn of the Privy-Council.

On Monday following, his Majesty came into Rocheſter, where, after he had a little refreshed himself, he went to Chatham, to see the Royal Sovereign, and returned that Night to Colonel Gibbons his House, where he lay, and was by the Colonel presented with a most Dutiful and Loyal Address from him and his Regiment which was then Quartered in Rocheſter.

He is entertained at Rocheſter by Col. Gibbons.

From thence his Majesty marched to Black-Heath, where the Army was drawn up, and was much pleas'd with the sight of it; for indeed they seem'd all men of one age, and one mind, and were for their number, as gallant Troops as were to be seen in the World.

The Army being drawn up on Black-Heath welcomed his Majesty with great joy and acclamation.

Colonel Knight there most humbly presented to his Majesty a Writing, which contained the most humble and obedient Declaration of the Armies joy, for the Honour of his Majesties presence amongst them; wherein after many dutiful expressions of exalted gladness for his Majesties Restauration, they besought, That his Majesty would have now his great Council about him, who had already given proof of their Loyalty and Wisdom both to his Majesty and all his People. They also declared, That as they had not been altogether useless in the Restauration of his Sacred Majesty, to his Crown and Kingdom, and his People to their just Rights thereby; so they should for the future cheerfully sacrifice their Lives, or whatsoever could be more dear unto them, in the service of his Majesty, against all opposers whatsoever, and by a ready Obedience to his Majesties Commands, express themselves better than in words.

When his Majesty came to St. Georges's Fields, the Lord Major and Aldermen humbly on their knees Reverenc'd him, and the Lord Major presented his Sword, which his Majesty gave back to him; and after a little Collation in a Tent, provided by the Lord Major, his Majesty went towards White-Hall in this manner:

All the streets were richly adorn'd with Tapestries, from London-Bridge to White-Hall; and as far as Temple-Bar, were equally ranked in good order, the Trained-Band-Forces on the one side of the streets, and the several Companies in their Liveries on the other: From Temple-Bar to White-Hall, the Trained-Bands of Westminster, and the parts adjacent on one side, and some Companies of the Army on the other, to whom was joyn'd a gallant Company of the late Kings Officers, Commanded by Sir John Stowell.

The Procession was led by Major General Brown, who had a Troop of three hundred, all in Cloth of Silver Doublets; then followed twelve hundred in Velvet Coats, with Foot-men and Liveries attending them in Purple; Then another Troop led by Alderman Robinson, in Buff-Coats, with Cloth of Silver-sleeves, and very rich Green Scarfs; and after these a Troop of about a hundred and fifty with blew Liveries, laced with Silver Lace, with six Trumpeters, and seven Foot-men in Sea-green and Silver: Then a Troop of two hundred and twenty, with thirty Foot-men in Gray and Silver Liveries, and four Trumpeters richly Cloathed; Then another Troop of one hundred and five, with Gray Liveries, and six Trumpets: and another of seventy with five Trumpets: And then three Troops more, two of three hundred, and one of one hundred, all richly habited, and bravely mounted. After these came two Trumpets with his Majesties Arms; The Sheriffs men in red Cloaks richly Laced with Silver Lace, to the number of fourscore, with half Pikes in their hands: then followed six hundred of the several Companies of London on Horseback, in black Velvet Coats, with Gold Chains, each Company having Foot-men in Liveries attending.

After these came a Kettle-Drum, five Trumpets, and three Streamers, and many rich red Liveries with Silver Lace: After these twelve Ministers, and then another Kettle-Drum, and four Trumpets, and his Majesties Life-guard of Horse, Commanded by the Lord Gerrard; Then three Trumpets in rich Coats, and Satin Doublets, and the City Marshal, with eight Foot-men in French-Green, trim'd with Crimson and White: The City Waits, and all the City Officers in order: Then the two Sheriffs, and all the Aldermen of London in Scarlet Gowns, and rich Trappings, with Footmen in Liveries, Red Coats Laced with Silver, and Cloth of Gold and Silver. The Heralds and Maces in rich Coats. Then the Lord Major carrying the Sword bare, and next to him the Duke of Buckingham, and the General, and then the Kings Majesty betwixt the Dukes of York and Gloucester: Then followed a Troop of Horse with white colours, and after them, the Generals Life-guard, led by Sir Philip Howard:

Then five Regiments of the Army-Horse, led by Colonel Knight: And after them, two Troops of Noblemen and Gentlemen.

Thus was his Majesty conducted to his Royal Palace at White-Hall, on the nine and twentieth day of May, His Birth-day; and with him, Peace and Happiness return'd to His Kingdoms and People, which all good men desire may be for ever continued to them, under the happy Government of Him and His Posterity.

When the Lord Major had taken leave of him, he went to the Lords, where he was entertained with a Grave but Eloquent Speech of the Earl of Manchester, and from thence to the Banqueting-House, where the whole House of Commons attending him, the Speaker in their Names expressed the Joyful Sence they all had, to behold his Majesty returned in safety, and thereby an end was put to that Tyranny and Slavery his good People had endured.

The King told them, He was so disordered by his Journey, and with the noise still sounding in his Ears, (which nevertheless He confess'd was pleasing to him, because it expressed the Affections of his People) that he was thereby unfit to make such a Reply as he desired; But added, That he took no greater Satisfaction to himself in this his Change, than that he found his heart really set to endeavour by all means the restoring of these Nations to their Freedom and Happiness; which he hoped by the Advice of his Parliament to effect: And that, next to the Honour of God, from whom he chiefly owned the Restoration to his Crown, he would study the Welfare of his People; and not only be a true Defender of the Faith, but a Just Assertor of the Laws and Liberties of his Subjects.

After the conclusion of these Ceremonies, he intended to go to Westminster-Abby to offer up a Thanksgiving to GOD for all his Deliverances and Mercies towards him; but by the Weariness he had contracted through the Toil, (however grateful) of that Days Action, he was diverted from his intention of going thither; yet would he not for any consideration be withheld from his Devotion, and his Oblations of Thanks to God, which at that time he made in his Presence-Chamber, because his Chappel was not yet prepared for his Reception.

The next day the Dukes of York and Gloucester took their Places in the House of Peers, as did a while after several other Peers who were made by his Majesty beyond the Seas, and Summoned by Writ; viz. Henry Fermin Earl of St. Albanes, and Baron of St. Edmonds-Bury; John Mordant, Viscount Mordant of Aveland; Sir Marmaduke Langdale, Baron Langdale of Holm; Charles Crofts, Baron Crofts; Sir John Barklay, Baron Barklay.

In the first place after his Majesties Arrival, were appointed the chief Officers of State, and of his Majesties Household, His Highness the Duke of York was Invested with the Office of Lord High-Admiral of England, and Lord Warden of the Cinque-Ports. The Lord General Monk was continued Captain General of all the Forces of the Three Kingdoms, and made Master of the Horse to His Majesty: Sir Edward

Hide

Hide (afterwards Earl of Clarendon) was constituted Lord High Chancellour of England: The Earl of Southampton Lord High Treasurer of England: Sir Edward Nicholas, and Sir William Morrice, Chief Secretaries of State. The Marquess of Ormond was appointed Lord Steward: and the Earl of Manchester, Lord Chamberlain of his Majesties Household: Sir Frederick Cornwallis, Treasurer of the Household; and Sir Charles Berkley, Comptroller: and Sir George Carteret, Vice-Chamberlain of the Household, and afterwards Treasurer of the Navy: Besides several others, who for their Eminent Loyalty and good Services, were advanced to Places of Highest Trust and Dignity in Court and Commonwealth. Moreover, his Majesties Privy Council consisted of these Persons following:

The Lords of his Majesties Privy Council.

The Duke of York.
 Lord Chancellour.
 Marquess of Ormond.
 Marquess of Dorchester.
 Earl of Lindsey, Lord high Chamberlain of England.
 Earl of Berkshire.
 Earl of Southampton.
 Earl of Norwich.
 Lord Say and Seal.
 Lord Wentworth.
 Lord Seymour.
 Mr. Denzell Holles.
 Sir Frederick Cornwallis, Treasurer of His Majesties Household.
 Sir Edward Nicholas.
 Sir George Carteret, Vice-Chamberlain to His Majesty.
 Sir Anthony Ashley-Cooper.
 Colonel Charles Howard.
 The Duke of Gloucester.
 Lord General Monck.
 Marquess of Hertford.
 Earl of Manchester, Lord Chamberlain of the Kings Household.
 Earl of Northumberland.
 Earl of St. Albans.
 Earl of Leicester.
 Lord Culpeper.
 Lord Roberts.
 Mr. Arthur Annesly.
 Sir Charles Barkley Comptroller of his Majesties Household.
 Sir William Morrice.
 General Mountague.

The Clerks of the Privy Council were Sir Richard Brown Knight and Baronet, (who having been 19 Years Resident in the Court of France for his Majesty and his Royal Father, managed that Imployment with extraordinary Prudence, Address and Integrity, and in whose Chappel at Paris the Liturgy of the Church of England had been solemnly kept up during its Eclipse at home) Sir Edward Walker Garter King of Arms. John Nicholas Esq; Eldest Son to the Secretary of State; And Sir George Lane, Secretary to the Marquess of Ormond.

Military Commands conferred upon several Lords and Gentlemen,

In the next place, special Care was taken for the committing of all Military Offices of highest Trust, as well as the Civil already mentioned, into the hands of such Persons as were judged most faithful to the Kings Service; so that the Governments of all the most Important Castles, Fortresses, and Islands, and the first Commands of the several Regiments of the Army, were by the Lord General conferred upon such Lords & other Persons of Honour, as the King was pleas'd to recommend unto him to that Effect, until such time as the Army could conveniently be disbanded. Likewise, for the farther settling of the Militia of the Nation, there were of the Chief Nobility of the Land Constituted Lord-Lieutenants of the several Counties, each having under them, as Deputy-Lieutenants, such Gentlemen of the same Counties as had most eminently shewn their affections to his Majesty.

The House of Commons in the mean time, applied themselves to the perfecting of an Act of General Pardon, which was read Twice in the House the One and Thirtieth of this Moneth, thereby complying with that great Clemency and Indulgence of his Majesty to his People, expressed in his most gracious Letter from Breda. They had in the first Proposition of this Act, designed to except from Pardon several of the Judges of the late King, and others instrumental in the perpetration of that horrid Treason: of which they had in Custody Eight persons, (viz.) Harrison, Carew, Clement, and Jones, of the Judges; Cook who was the Prosecutor, Hacker Captain of the Halberdeers, and Colonel Axtel, also Hugh Peters the Minister, a virulent Incendiary in the action, who for a while had been sculking up and down in secret, was at length taken in Southwark. There were others that had been seduced into that Treason, (viz.) Colonel Richard Ingoldsby, Francis Lassels, and John Hutchinson; but so much was said in the House in their favours, that they were not made culpable with the rest. As for Ingoldsby, it was made to appear, that Oliver Cromwell, without his consent, set his hand and seal to the Warrant for Execution of the King: Besides that, by many Actions of his Loyalty since, and his Engagement in Sir George Booth's business, and against Lambert, (as is before related) he had given eminent testimony of his abhorrency of so foul a Crime. Lassels had never been in the High Court of Justice, and but once at any meeting with them, and at that time he declared his dissent to their proceedings. And Hutchinson had been a very early Convert, and appeared much against that execrable Oath of Abjuration of the King's Person and Posterity, in that part of the Parliament which sat at the time of General Monck's March into London.

This Act of General Pardon had so many particulars in it of different nature, that it took up very much time; but nevertheless, the Parliament omitted not to perfect some necessary Laws for the safety of the Government. On the second of June, the Parliament having the day before intimated to the King, that they had prepared Three Bills for him, His Majesty came to the House of Lords, and having sent to the House of Commons to attend him, there gave his Royal Assent to them; (viz.) To an ACT for Confirmation of an Ordinance made by the Lords and Commons in his absence, of the raising of Seventy Thousand Pounds a Moneth for Three Moneths. An ACT for Confirmation of the present Parliament.
 C c c c And

The Commons set upon the Act of General Pardon.

The King comes to the Parliament, and gives his Royal Assent to several Bills.

And, An ACT for the Continuance of Process in Judicial Proceedings. Which last was for avoiding of Discontinuances in the Courts of Westminster, because the first four Returns of Easter-Term could not be conveniently kept, and to prevent the abatement of Writs that were not issued in the Kings Name before his Return to the exercise of Government.

His Majesty also prest them (as well by his particular Charge, as by the Lord Chancellor's Speech) to hasten their passing of the Bill of Indemnity, which (as well as all other Bills of Publick Concernment) he was ready to Sign; whereupon this Bill was from thenceforth the grand business of both Houses until it was finished: Nor could it be finished till after some considerable time, and many large and serious Consultations. In the mean time, the Two Houses themselves desired to lay hold upon this Amnesty in the Name of the whole Nobility and Commonalty of the Nation: which being easily granted by the King, the Ceremony was performed in the Banqueting-House, where they waited upon his Majesty to that end.

About this time came forth a Proclamation, whereby it was declared, That all such of the late Kings Judges as did not render themselves, should be Excepted out of the General Pardon: And thereupon Adrian Scroop, and Nineteen others of them concealed in several parts, presented themselves to the Speaker of the House of Commons, and were committed to Custody. The Lord Grey of Grooby, and four and twenty more were dead, and Thomas Scot, and Nineteen others escaped beyond the Seas, but were attainted by Act of Parliament, as shall be hereafter expressed; And Scot was, shortly after his Escape, taken at Bruxels and by the diligence of the Kings Agent there sent into England, and sent to the Tower.

The Oaths of Supremacy and Allegiance taken by both Houses of Parliament. The Kings Servants and Officers of his Household, &c.

On the 4th of June, the Oaths of Supremacy and Allegiance to the King were tendered to all the Members of both Houses of Parliament, with the Kings Servants and Officers of his Household, by the Lord Steward, and the Lord Chamberlain: And by Order of Parliament, of the 4th of the same Month, the Lord General was desired to take an effectual Care, that the same Oaths should be administred to all the Officers and Souldiers of the Armies under his Command; And the Lord Chancellor to that end was also desired to Issue forth Commissions under the Great Seal of England, to such persons as the Lord General should nominate and appoint, for administring the said Oaths to the Officers and Souldiers accordingly. This Order was with all imaginable Care executed both by the General and the Chancellor: And to settle the Army so as it might be most serviceable to his Majesty, he removed several Colonels and other Officers, and placed divers of the Loyal Nobility and Gentry in their places.

As the generality of the people had a little before, upon the conclusion of his Majesties Admission into his Dominions, and his preparation to come over, given great demonstrations of their Affection and Loyalty to him, by their universal alacrity in proclaiming him throughout the Three Nations; So likewise, immediately after he was come, they were no less forward to manifest their Duty and Allegiance by Congratulatory Addresses from all parts of the Kingdom, (the like duty being perform'd by several of the Nobility and Gentry both of Scotland and Ireland;) also those Towns and Corporations that had bought out their several Fee-Farm-Rents belonging Formerly to the Crown, and by the late Commonwealth alienated from it, sent their Deputies to his Majesty, to make a voluntary Surrender of them back again unto him. Others presented him with summs of Gold and other gifts according to their abilities: But the City of London, as being the first, the richest and most Honourable, and the Seat of Kings for many Ages, judg'd themselves oblig'd in point of Duty and Reputation, to exceed all the rest in the glory of their performances toward their Sovereign; and therefore to the splendour of their former preparations at his first Reception and Triumphal Extrada, they added the Cost of a most Magnificent entertainment at Guild-Hall, (which was for that very purpose richly beautified and adorn'd) to which the King, the two Princes his Brothers, the Lords of the Privy Council, the Two Houses of Parliament, and the Chief Officers of State being solemnly invited, were, on Thursday the 5th of July, conducted thither in very great Pomp by the Lord Major and the Grandees of the City, where they were Treated in a Royal manner with the choicest of delicacies, with excellent Musick, and whatever else could be thought on or delightful for so illustrious an Assembly.

His Entertainment at Guild-Hall.

Nor was his Majesty wanting on the other side to give such publick Testimonies of his Vertue and Prudence, as might render him deservedly glorious in the esteem of all sober and moderate persons, and that by several wholesome Edicts, especially by that seasonable Proclamation which he published, one of the first things he did after his Arrival, for the discountenancing and punishing of Debauchery, Profaneness and all manner of Vice: Dated the 31 of May 1660.

He sets forth a Proclamation on against Debauchery and Profaneness.

The King sate very frequently in Council about the great Affairs of Government; and upon Information that many Irish Rebels had in unusual numbers resorted from beyond the Seas to England and Ireland, and were so insolent as to dispossess many Souldiers, and Adventurers in Ireland, who had possession of their forfeited Estates; at the humble Request of the Parliament, the King published a Proclamation, Commanding all Irish Rebels (such only excepted as by Articles had the Liberty of residing in his Majesties Dominions, and have not forfeited the same,) that still stay in, or shall resort to, England or Ireland, to be apprehended and proceeded against as Rebels and Traytors: And that the Adventurers and Souldiers should not be disturbed in their Possessions, until the King by Advice of Parliament shall take further Order, or they be Legally Evicted. And requiring all Officers both Civil and Military, to see the said Proclamation put in Execution.

The Kings Proclamation concerning the Irish Rebels.

But notwithstanding his Majesties great Care and Zeal to Settle and Compose all publick Differences, many ill-affected people in Pamphlets aspersed his Actions, maliciously endeavouring to insinuate, that he intended nothing less than the performance of his Promises from

Breda:

Breda; which made him send a Message to the House of Commons by Sir William Morrice, to quicken their Debates about the Act of General Pardon and Indempnity, as that which would best quiet the minds of his Subjects.

The Kings Message to the House of Commons, about the Act of General Pardon.

He told them, 'He had too ample a manifestation of their affections and duty towards him, (the good Effects of which was notorious to the World) to make the least doubt of the continuance and improvement thereof, or in the least degree to dislike what they had done, or to complain of what they had left undone: And that he knew well the Weight of those Affairs which depended upon their Counsels, and the time that must unavoidably be spent, where there must be naturally difference of Opinions and Judgments amongst those whose desires of the Publick Peace and Safety were the same. And that neither he nor they must be over-much troubled, if they found their good Intention, and unwearied pains, taken to reduce those good Intentions into real Acts for the quiet and security of the Nation, misrepresented, and mis-interpreted, by those who are in truth afflicted to see the Publick Distractions, by Gods Blessing, so near an end; and by others, upon whose weakness, fears and jealousies, the activity and cunning of those ill men hath had too great an Influence.

'That how wonderful and miraculous soever the great harmony of affections between him and his Subjects is, (it being so visible to the World, that there scarce appears the view of any Cloud to over-shadow or disturb it) yet it is not to be thought that God Almighty had wrought the Miracle to that degree, that a Nation so miraculously divided for so many years, would be so soon and intirely united in their affections and endeavours as were to be wished; but that the Evil Consciences of many continued so awake for mischief, they would not be willing to take rest themselves, or suffer others to take it: And that they all had too sad Experience of the unhappy effects of fears and jealousies (how groundless and unreasonable soever) not to think it very necessary to apply all timely and proper Remedies to those Distempers, and to prevent the inconveniences and mischiefs which so naturally flow from thence: That he well foresaw, that the great violation which the Laws of the Land had for so many years sustained, had filled the hearts of the people with a terrible apprehension of insecurity to themselves, if all they had said and done should be liable to be examined and punished by those Laws which had been so violated; and that nothing could establish the security of King and People, but a full Provision, that the returning to the reverence and obedience of the Law (which is good for all) should not turn to the ruine of any who were willing and fit to receive that Protection hereafter from the Law, and to pay that subjection to it which were just and necessary; and therefore, he said, he made a free Offer of a General Pardon in such a manner as was expressed in his Declaration; and how ready and desirous he was to make good the same, appeared by his Proclamation issued out upon and according to their desire: However, it was evident, that all

he had offered, or did offer, did not enough compose the minds of his people; nor in their Opinions could their security be provided for, till the Act of Indempnity and Oblivion were passed. He said, He found great industry used (by those who did not wish that Peace to the Kingdom they ought to do) to perswade his good Subjects that he had no mind to make good his Promises, which he desired to perform for his own sake, as well as theirs. And that therefore he did very earnestly recommend it to them, that all expedition might be used in the passing that most necessary Act, whereby his good Subjects generally would be satisfied, that their security was in their own hands, and depended upon their future actions, and that they were free for all past; and so all the endeavours of ill men would be disappointed, who would perswade them not to do well now, because they had done amiss heretofore. And that he was the more engag'd to this his recommendation, because upon the reflection of their Eminent Zeal and Affection for his Service, and hearty Concurrence with him in all things desired from them, men were apt to perswade others (though not believing it themselves) that the passing of this Act was therefore not desired, because he did not enough press the dispatch of it; which he did desire from his heart, and was confident they would the sooner do it, upon his earnest recommendation.

This Message did so much quicken their Debates, that they dispatch'd the Bill in a very short time, and sent it up to the Lords, and the Peoples minds were much compos'd thereby; and the more, for that his Majesty by a Proclamation after it, did declare a kind of impatience for the delay thereof.

About the beginning of July, General Monk was by Letters-Patents under the Great Seal of England, made Duke of Albemarle, Earl of Torrington, Baron Monk of Potheridge, Beauchampe, and Teyes, and summoned by Writ to the House of Peers. The Titles of Albemarle and Beauchampe were conferred on him, because he was descended from Margaret, one of the Daughters and Co-heirs of Richard Beauchampe, Earl of Albemarle and Warwick, who was married to the Famous Warriour John Talbot, Earl of Shrewsbury, well known in France, whose Son John had only one Daughter married to Edward Grey Viscount Lisle, whose Daughter and Heir Elizabeth Grey was married to Arthur Plantagenet, a Natural Son of King Edward the Fourth, who was in her right Viscount Lisle; and Frances, one of the Daughters and Co-heirs of the said Viscount Lisle, was married to Sir Thomas Monk, Great Grand-father to the present Duke of Albemarle.

And a few days after, Mr. Edward Mountague, one of the Generals at Sea, was made a Knight of the Order of the Garter, and by Letters-Patents dignified with the Honours of Earl of Sandwich, Viscount Mountague of Hinchbrook, and Baron of S. Needs. And the Marquess of Ormond was made Earl of Brecknock, and Baron Butler of Lanthony; and these two in the same Order they were created, had Writs to summon them to the House of Peers. Which Marquess was afterwards created the Duke of Ormond.

The Lords in Parliament were in Consultation to except 'all from Pardon that had been Judges in any High Court of Justice, which was no more than such men deserved, who could so maliciously contribute to the subversion of the good Laws and Government of their Native Country: But the Kings Clemency extended to all who were not guilty of his Fathers Murder; and observing those Debates to obstruct much the speedy perfecting that Bill he so earnestly desired to have finished, on the 27th of July he went to the said House, and in a handsome and most gracious Speech, expressed his Zeal for it in the following words:

My Lords,

The Kings Speech to the Parliament to hasten the perfecting of the Act of Oblivion.

When I came first hither to you, which was within two or three days after I came to White-Hall, I did with as much earnestness as I could, both by my self, and the Chancellor, recommend to you and the House of Commons, the speedy dispatch of the Act of Indemnity, as a necessary Foundation of that Security We all pray for: I did since, by a particular Message to the House of Commons, again press them to hasten that important work; And did likewise by a Proclamation publish to all the Kingdom, That I did with impatience expect that that Act would be presented to me for my Assent, as the most reasonable and solid Foundation of that Peace, Happiness, and Security I hope and pray for to my self, and all my Dominions. I will not deny it to you, I thought the House of Commons too long about that work; and therefore now it is come up to you, I would not have you guilty of the same delay. I thank God I have the same Intentions and Resolutions, now I am here with you, which I had at Breda, and believe that I owe my being here, to Gods blessing upon the Intentions and Resolutions I then expressed to have. I will read to you what I then said:

And to the end that the fear of Punishment may not ingage any, Conscious to themselves of what is passed, to a perseverance in Guilt for the future, by exposing the quiet and happiness of their Country, in the Restoration both of King, Peers and People, to their Just, Ancient and Fundamental Rights; We do by these Presents declare, That We do grant a Free and General Pardon, which We are ready upon demand, to pass under Our Great Seal of England, to all Our Subjects of what Degree or Quality soever, who within forty days after the publishing hereof, shall lay hold upon this Our Grace and Favour, and shall by any publick Act declare their doing so; And that they return to the Loyalty and Obedience of good Subjects (excepting only such persons as shall hereafter be excepted by Parliament.)

Those only excepted, let all Our loving Subjects, how faulty soever, relye upon the Word of a King solemnly given by this present Declaration, That no Crime whatsoever committed against Us or Our Royal Father, before the Publication of this, shall ever rise in Judgment, or be brought in Question against any of them, to the least endamage of them, either in their Lives, Liberties, or Estates, or (as far forth as lies in Our power) so much as to the prejudice of their Reputations, by any reproach or term of distinction from the rest of Our best Subjects: We desiring and ordaining, That henceforward all Notes of Discord, Separation and Difference of Parties be utterly abolished among all Our Subjects, whom We invite and conjure to a perfect Union among themselves under Our Protection, for the re-settlement of Our just Rights, and Theirs, in a Free Parliament; by which, upon the Word of a King, We will be advised.

My Lords, If you do not joyn with Me in extinguishing this Fear, which keeps the hearts of men awake, and apprehensive of safety and security, you keep me from performing my Promise; which if I had not made, I am persuaded neither I nor you had been now here: I pray let us not deceive those who brought, or permitted us to come together. I knew well there were some men who could neither forgive themselves, nor be forgiven by Us; and I thank you for your Justice towards those, the immediate Murderers of my Father: And I will deal truly with you, I never thought of excepting any other. I pray think well upon what I have offered, and the benefit you and I have received from that offer; and encourage and oblige all other persons, by not excluding them from the benefit of this Act. This Mercy and Indulgence is the best way to bring them to a true repentance, and to make them more severe to themselves, when they find we are not so to them. It will make them good Subjects to me, and good Friends and Neighbours to you, and we have then all our ends, and you shall find this the securest Expedient to prevent future mischief. Therefore I do earnestly desire and conjure you, to depart from all particular animosities and revenge, or memory of past provocations, and that you will pass this Act without other Exceptions, than of those who were immediately guilty of that Murder of my Father.

My Lords, I have told you my Opinion, and I hope you will be of the same. If any persons appear of such dangerous and obstinate Principles, that the Peace of the Kingdom cannot be preserved whilst they have Liberty in it, some other course may be taken, that they shall not be able to do hurt; and I assure you, there is nothing can enable them to do so much harm, as the deferring the passing this Act.

I hope I need say nothing of Ireland, and that they alone shall not be without the benefit of my Mercy: They have shewed much affection to me abroad, and you will have a care of my Honour, and of what I have promised to them. I do again conjure you, that you will use all expedition in the dispatch of this Bill.

This Speech did not only expedite the passing of this Act in the House of Peers, but give a general satisfaction to the people, who were exceedingly quieted in their minds with the Kings resolute care on the behalf of all his Subjects; nor was his mind so intent on this necessary Affair, as to neglect the other Concerns of Government: But observing, that the late Differences of his People had created many Animositities against fighting of Duels.

fities amongst them, which occasioned frequent Duels, he thought fit to prevent the inconveniencies thereof by a Proclamation; whereby he manifested so great a dislike of Duels, as strictly to command all his Subjects whatsoever, neither by themselves, nor any other by Message, Word or Writing, or other ways or means to Challenge, or cause to be Challenged, any person or persons to fight in Duel, nor to carry, accept, nor conceal any Challenge, nor actually to fight, or be second to any therein.

And he further declared, That every person offending against his Commands herein, should not only incur his Displeasure, but be incapable of holding any Office in his Service, and never after be permitted to come to Court, or prefer'd, besides the suffering such punishment as the Law should inflict on such Offenders; And all persons that should accept or know of such Challenges, and not reveal the same to one of the Privy Council, or the next Justice of Peace, should be liable to the same Penalties. And further, he was so severe in this matter, as to forbid any Intercession to be made for Offenders against this Proclamation.

By this good Government, a general tranquillity appear'd in all the King's Dominions; and to lessen the Publick Charge, the Parliament were providing Money to disband the Armies, and pay off such of the Ships as were more than needful for the guard of the Seas. And in order hereunto, the General was so provident, as to give order to the Muster-Master-General to admit of no new Souldiers in any Troop or Companies, and the Officers likewise had Charge to entertain none upon any vacancies.

The English Commissioners in Scotland having been employed as Judges for the Government of that Nation, and having had their Commissions continued in force for some time after the Kings coming in, they were at length by the Letters from the Duke of Albemarle acquainted with the Kings pleasure, That from the 22 of August they should cease to act any more in this their Judicatory Power, in regard that Kingdom was thenceforth to be reduc'd to its ancient form of Government; in order to which, Proclamation was made in the Kings Name, for the speedy Convening of the Committee of the Three Estates of Scotland; a Parliament also being to be called there within a few Months: And in the interim, the Chief Ministers of State were Constituted: The Earl of Glencarn was made Lord Chancellour; the Lord Craford-Lindsey Lord Treasurer; the Earl of Cassiles Justice-General, the Earl of Lauderdale Chief Secretary of State, and General Middleton the Kings Commissioner, with several others.

The Committee of Estates being assembled, made it their first care to keep all things in peace and quiet, and obedience to the present Government; for notwithstanding the late unanimous concurrence of the people at Edenborough (as well as other places) in the publick Proclaiming of his Majesty, yet after a short while there began to discover it self a spirit of discontent among certain Scotch Ministers, who were of the principal Sticklers of the Kirk-party, as appear'd by their meeting together at a place appointed, for the drawing up of a Remonstrance concerning certain things wherein they thought themselves aggrieved; which the Committee of Estates having notice of, sent forthwith to apprehend them, and clapt them up in Prison; and for the prevention of the like disturbances for the future, set forth a Proclamation against all Unlawful Meetings, and Seditious Papers.

And the same thing that befel these Ministers, hapned also to their Countryman the Marquess of Argyle, who notwithstanding that he came to Court with others of the Nobility and Gentry of Scotland, upon pretence of tending his service to his Majesty; yet he had not it seems carried himself so blamelessly, but that a sufficient cause was found for the laying of High Treason to his Charge, and committing him thereupon a Prisoner to the Tower; and together with him were committed the Marquess of Antrim, Sir Henry Vane, and Sir Arthur Haslerig, besides several others that follow'd soon after.

In Ireland the Convention that had assembled there upon the change of Government, as soon as they had taken order for the settling of things in that Nation, in conformity to the Kings Authority, (Colonel Eyres, who endeavour'd to raise a Party in opposition to it, being reduc'd by Sir Charles Coote) and had appointed from among them certain Commissioners to wait upon his Majesty with their Gratulations and desires, thought fit to dissolve themselves, in expectation of the Kings Pleasure for the calling of a full Parliament, and to make way for the Ancient Constitution of the Government by a Lord Lieutenant, as had been determin'd by the King and his Council.

The Act of Indemnity was sent from the Lords to the Commons with several alterations, to which the Commons were very unwilling to agree; for they had subjected twenty that were not the Kings Judges, to be liable to such pains and penalties, not extending to life, as should be inflicted by another Act to be passed in this Parliament: Whereas the Lords finding the Kings Inclination to tend towards the pardoning of all but such as were his Fathers Judges, or otherwise Actors in his Murder, they disagreed to that part of the Act, as to all those named by the Commons, except Sir Arthur Haslerig, Sir Henry Vane, and Colonel John Lambert, who were esteemed to be so maliciously active in opposition to his Majesties Government, as to be excepted from any conditions of Pardon. The Commons for some time adhered to their first Resolution; but after several Conferences, they agreed with the Lords in all things, except some little alterations to their frame of the Act; Vane and Lambert were excepted, but Haslerig remained liable to such pains, penalties, and forfeitures, as should be inflicted on him, not extending to life; and the rest of those put under the same Qualification by the Commons that were not of the Kings Judges, were made only with others incapable of Offices, as shall be hereafter shewn, when we come to write of the parts of that Act.

That which put Sir Arthur Haslerig under so favourable a Qualification, was an Engagement made to him by the Duke of Albemarle; For Haslerig coming to him, when he perceiv'd the Revolution hasten towards the Restoration Restoration of the King and his Government, he expostulated with him about it, in reference to the security of his own Condition: The Duke was unwilling to make him desperate, because he had at that time a Regiment of Horse, and a Regiment of Foot in the Garrisons of Newcastle, Tinnmouth, Berwick, and Carlisle, under his Government; which (if he had opposed) could not have been reduced to obedience without the effusion of Blood, which his Excellency much endeavoured to avoid in all the progress of his Actions; and therefore told him, If he would quietly give up his Command, and retire to his house, he would endeavour to secure him in his Life and Estate, and doubted not to effect it. This being made known at a Conference by the House of Commons, was justified with great modesty by the Duke in the House of Peers, and his Life was thereupon pardoned in the Act; and a small time after his Estate also was, at the mediation of the Duke, granted to his Heir, a man averse to his Fathers disloyal Principles: Sir Arthur himself, a while after his Imprisonment, dying of a Fever in the Tower.

An Instance of his Majesties Affection to his People.

At this last Conference of the Lords and Commons, the Lord Chancellor took occasion to speak of the Kings Affection to his people, by a very remarkable Instance, saying, That he being employed in an Embassy to Spain, had it strictly given him in charge by his Majesty to avow and declare, That the horrid Murder of his Royal Father, was not the Act of the Parliament, or People of England, but of a very wretched and little company of Miscreants in the Kingdom. Which was so pleasing to the House of Commons, that upon the report of it to them, they ordered such of the Privy Council as were Members of that House, to present to his Majesty the humble and thankful Sense they had of his Justice and Favour for that just Defence he had been graciously pleas'd to make in behalf of the Parliament, and People of England.

A few days after this, that is to say, the 29th of August, the King had notice that there were five Acts prepared for his Royal Assent, and he therefore repaired to the Lords House, and sent for the Commons to him, where he assented to them. The Acts were;

Several Acts
Signed.

1. An Act for Confirmation of Judicial Proceedings. 2. An Act for a speedy Provision of Money, to pay off and disband all the Forces of this Kingdom both by Sea and Land. 3. An Act for the restraining the taking of Excessive Usury. 4. An Act of General Pardon, Indemnity, and Oblivion. 5. An Act for a Perpetual Anniversary Thanksgiving on the Twenty Ninth day of May, the day of his Majesties Nativity and Restoration.

At the passing of which ACTS, he express'd himself in these words;

My Lords, and Gentlemen of the House of Commons;

The Kings Speech in Parliament, at the passing of those Acts.

I Have been here sometimes before with you, but never with more willingness, than I am at this time. And there be few men in the Kingdom, who have longed more impatiently to have those Bills passed, than I have done to pass them; and I hope they will be the Foundation of much security and happiness to us all. I do very willingly pardon all that is pardoned by this Act of Indemnity, to that time which is mentioned in the Bill; Nay, I will tell you, that from that time to this day, I will not use great Severity, except in such Cases where the Malice is notorious, and the Publick Peace exceedingly concern'd: But for the time to come, the same Discretion and Conscience, which disposed me to the Clemency I have expressed, which is most agreeable to my Nature, will oblige me to all Rigour and Severity, how contrary soever it be to my Nature, towards those who shall not now acquiesce, but continue to manifest their sedition and dislike of the Government, either in action or words.

And I must conjure you all (my Lords and Gentlemen) to concur with Me in this just and necessary severity; and that you will in your several Stations be so jealous of the Publick Peace, and of my particular Honour, that you will cause exemplary Justice to be done upon those who are guilty of Seditious Speeches or Writings, as well as those who break out into Seditious Actions: And that you will believe those who delight in reproaching and traducing my Person, not to be well affected to You, and the Publick Peace.

Never King valued himself more upon the affections of his People than I do; nor do I know a better way to make my self sure of your affections, than by being just and kind to you all: And whilst I am so, I pray let the world see that I am possessed of your affections.

For your Pole-Bill, I do thank you as much as if the Money were to come into my own Coffers; and wish with all my heart, that it may amount to as great a sum as you reckon upon. If the Work be well and orderly done to which it is designed, I am sure I shall be the richer by it in the end: and upon my Word, if I had wherewithal, I would my Self help you, so much I desire the business done.

I pray very earnestly, as fast as Money comes in, discharge that great burthen of the Navy, and disband the Army as fast as you can; and till you can disband the rest, make a provision for their support. I do conjure you, as you love me, let me not hear the noise of Free-quarter, which will be imputed to my want of Care and Government, how Innocent soever I am; and therefore be sure you prevent it.

I am so confident of your affections, that I will not move you in any thing that immediately relates to my self; and yet I must tell you, I am not richer, that is, I have not so much Money in my Purse as when I came to you: The truth is, I have lived principally ever since upon what I brought with me which was indeed your Money, for you sent it to me, and I thank you for it. The Weekly expence of the Navy, eats up all you have given me by the Bill of Tonnage and Poundage. Nor have I been able to give my Brothers one Shilling since I came into England, nor to keep any Table in my House, but what I eat my Self. And that which troubles me most is, to see so many of you come to me to White-Hall, and to think you must go some-where else to seek your Dinner.

I do not mention this to you, as any thing that troubles me; do but take care of the Publick,

'lick and for what is necessary for the Peace and
'Quiet of the Kingdom, and take your own time
'for My Own particular, which I am sure you 'will provide for with as much affection and
'frankness as I can desire.

Act for Confirmation of Judicial Proceedings.

The ACT for Confirmation of Judicial Proceedings, was as necessary at this Juncture, as the Act of General Pardon, since without this, besides many other Inconveniencies, so great a Confusion would have been in most mens Estates as would have made them subject to perpetual Incertainties.

1. 'By this Law, All Proceedings in Law or 'Equity in all or any of the Courts at Westmin- 'ster, or in Wales, or in the County Palatine, or 'Dutchy of Lancaster, or Berwick, or other in'feriour Courts, and all things done by the 'Judges and Officers in pursuance thereof, or of 'the Court of Admiralties, Delegates, Justices
'of Assize, Nisi Prius, Commission of Sewers,
'Bankrupts, or Charitable Uses, and all pro'ceedings thereupon had in England since the 'first of May, 1642. were Confirm'd, notwith-
'standing any defect of Legal Power, or diffe'rence in Style or Title.

2. 'All Fines Levied without paying the Kings
'Silver, or without entry of Mony given for the 'Concord, or before one Judg only, were made 'good and effectual; And all Fines, Recoveries,
'Judicial Proceedings in the Common-Pleas, since
'the death of the late King, of Lands in Demesne
'were confirm'd.

3. 'Whereas since the First of May, 1641.
'and before the 20th of August, 1660. divers
'who adhered to both Houses of Parliament had 'been Indicted for Treason, and others also 'who adhered to his Majesty or his Father, were
'Impeached in like manner: All such Indictments
'and Proceedings thereupon, and Grants made
'of any Lands forfeited by reason thereof, and 'Title to the mean profits claimed in that re'spect, were henceforth discharged, and resti'tution to be made to the respective persons
'and their Heirs.

4. 'All Recognizances, Bonds, and Securities
'made to the late Keepers, or Protector, not par'doned, or discharged, were to be prosecuted
'in the name and to the use of his Majesty, his 'Heirs and Successors.

To the Fourth Branch, such Securities were excepted as had been given to the late Powers by any for their adherence to the King or his Father, or relating to the late Troubles, which was by this Act made void; as likewise were all Obligations, Bonds, and Securities by Order of any Council of State, Committee of Safety, Major General, Decimators, or any other Military Power.

5. 'After the 8th of May 1660. no Judges
'at Westminster, Serjeants at Law, Commissions
'of Sewers, or of Bankrupts, or of Charitable 'Uses, Constituted by any of the late Usurped
'Powers, were to be continued.

6. 'No non-claim upon or after any Fine by 'this Act confirmed, shall extend to bar any 'Person or their Heirs (other than the Parties to 'the said Fines, and their Heirs and Trustees)
'for such Rights as they had by colour of any 'Act or pretended Ordinance of Parliament, since the first of May, 1642. and before the '25th of April, 1660. as of Crown-Lands, or

'of Church-Lands, or as the Lands of any person
'for adhering to the King, or his Father, or in 'relation to the late Troubles, so as such persons
'and their Heirs pursue their Claims by Actions
'or Entry within 5 years after the 29th of May,
'1660.

7. 'The Name and Styles of the Usurped
'Power and Authorities were declared to be 'Rebellious.

8. 'All Proceedings of High-Treason for Le-
'vying War against Oliver Cromwell, or any o'ther late Usurped Power, were made void; as 'likewise all Assurances, Recognizances, and 'Judgments for Debt, or Damages heretofore
'had or suffered by any person whose Convicti'on, Outlawry, or Attainder, was by this Act
'discharged.

This Act of Confirmation was nevertheless not to extend to confirm any illegal proceedings of the late High Courts of Justice, nor to confirm any Sales or Estates made by any pretended Act of Parliament since the first of May, 1642. nor to debar any person grieved, from having a Writ of Error, or Bill of Review, in such manner as formerly, Except such Errors and defects as were not by this Act remedied.

The Act for Provision of Money to pay off the Armies and Navy, was by Poll, and was a very great Tax, because many orders of Men were included in it, which were not mentioned in any former Act of the like kind.

The ACT of General Pardon, Indemnity and Oblivion, Pardons all the Kings Subjects of England and Ireland, Wales, Guernsey, Jersey, and Berwick, of all Treasons, Misdemeanors of Treasons, Murthers, Felonies, Offences and Crimes whatsoever, from the First of January 1637. to the 24th. of June, 1660. (not therein excepted) Committed by virtue or colour of any Command or Authority from the King or his Father, or any of the late Powers, and from all Pains of Death, pains Corporal, and Pecuniary; and generally from all other things, Causes, Suits, and Executions, which may or can be by the King in any wise, or by any means Pardoned. And also all personal Actions, Suits and Persecutions whatsoever by reason of the late Troubles; And the Act may be pleaded for any thing therein pardoned, without any Fee to the Officers for entering Judgment or Cause concerning such Plea. And if any Officer or Clerk in any of the Kings Courts issue out any Writ or Process, or molest any in their Bodies or Estates, for any thing herein Pardoned, or if any Sheriff, or Escheator, or other Officer whatsoever, levy, receive, take, or withhold any thing hereby pardoned, they shall pay to the party grieved treble Damages besides Costs, and pay to the King Twenty Pounds, and such Writs or Process shall be void.

1. Excepted out of this Act all Murthers not herein pardoned, Pyracies, Buggers, Rapes, and Ravishments of Women, and all Offence, made Felons by an Act, intituled, An Act to restrain Persons from Marriage, till their former Wives or Husbands be dead: And all Witchcrafts and Conjuraton, as also all Accompts of Treasurers, Receivers, Farmers or Collectors (other than Sub-Collectors of Parishes or Towns for their Receipts before the 24th of June, 1659) who had received any Customes, Prize-Goods, Assesments, or any other Publick Monies or Rents of the Crown-Lands, or Bishops and Dean and Chapter-Lands, which had been paid to them since

January

'January 1642. and of all Moneys grown due or contracted upon the Sale or disposition of such Lands, or the Lands of Popish Recufants, Convict or other Sequestred Lands.

1. 'The Heirs and Executors of any Accomptants excepted, and deceased, not to be lyable, except for such Moneys as are due upon Accompts already stated.

2. Moneys received for Fees, and Salaries or Wages, or disbursed for publick use, are not to be charged.

3. No Military Officer of the Armies, or Officers of the Navies, who before March 1659. received Moneys for his Pay, or the Pay of others, or for Contingencies of the Souldiers or Garrisons, to be called to accompt therefore.

4. 'Likewise none were to be called to Accompt for any of the Matters of this Exception, after the 24th of June, 1662.

5. 'All Briberies and Perjuries are Excepted out of this Act, and all Subornation of Perjury, or Witnesses and Forgery, and also all Offences in detaining or imbezelling any Goods, Moneys, Chattels, or Jewels of the late King, Queen, or Prince, or their Shipping and Ammunition of War, and other such Goods or Chattels, as have been sold or disposed to any Servants or Creditors of the late King for payment of their Debts or Wages; And all Accompts of the Revenues of Churches in Wales and Monmouthshire, and all Judgments of Discharge or Quietus est thereupon had.

This last Exception, as to the Churches in Wales, was inserted by the Parliament in this Act, upon Information, that some Factious People had, in the time of the late Usurpation, procured to themselves an Authority to Sequester all those Revenues, upon pretence to imploy them more equally to illiterate Preachers, for the better propagation of the Gospel in those parts, but kept the greatest part to their own use, leaving most of the Churches unsupplied.

3. All publick Duties levied by any Sheriff or other Officer for the use of the late King, or the late Powers, or the King in being, not accompted for or discharged, are excepted.

4. 'As also all Offences done by any Jesuit, Seminary or Popish Priest, contrary to the Statute of the 27th of Elizabeth. It is provided,

1. 'That a Writ of Capias may be made against persons Outlawed, pardoned by this Act, to Compel the Defendant to answer to the Plaintiff, at whose Suit they were Outlawed, may have a Scire facias against the party before the Pardon shall be allowed.

2. 'This Pardon is not to extend to pardon Outlawries upon any Writ of Capias ad Satisfaciendum, till the party Outlawed shall satisfy or agree with the party.

5. 'All Informations and Proceedings depending about High-Ways and Bridges since January, 1648. are excepted, and also all Recognizances, Bonds and Securities given or entered into since the 25th of March, 1640. by any Receiver, Bayliff, Collector or other Accomptant in the Exchequer.

6. 'Any person within three years that objected against another, any words of reproach, tending to revive the memory of the late differences, was to pay ten pounds, if a Gentleman, and forty shillings, if one of a more inferiour degree.

7. 'The Act gives no benefit to any who had any hand in Plotting the Rebellion of Ireland, nor to any that have stolon any Goods or Monies since the 24th of March, 1649.

8. 'Nor extends to discharge any from making restitution of those Rents, Monies, Horses, Cattle or other Goods, which since the 25th of July, 1659. have been by any person wrongfully received or taken away (which by a pretended Act, intituled, An Act of Repeal of two Acts of Parliament for Sequestration are to be repealed.)

9. 'All publick Monies paid in to any publick Use, are pardon'd, and Parties concern'd, so far as their acquittances extend unto, are to be discharged for the same. Nevertheless, those are not discharged that received any Money for the Tax of Decimation, or upon the Accompt of any Militia since 1648. not paid over and discharged by any that had a Legal or pretended authority to discharge the Receivers thereof.

10. 'The Kings menial Servants, or any that had directions from him, whom whilst they pretended to act in his Service were treacherous thereunto, were exempted from the benefit of this Act, if they were Outlawed and Convicted within Two Years from the 25th of April, 1660.

11. 'Excise for Goods whereof Entry had been made in the Custom-House since the 25th of March, 1658. not pardoned, nor Moneys due to the Farmors of Excise since the 25th of March, 1650.

12. 'The Act gives no benefit to Owen Rowe, Augustine Garland, Edmund Harvey, Henry Smith, Henry Martin, Sir Hardress Waller, Robert Titchborne, George Fleetwood, James Temple, Thomas Wait, Simon Mein, William Haveningham, Isaac Pennington, Peter Temple, Robert Lilborn, Gilbert Millington, Vincent Potter, Thomas Wogan, John Downs, Adrian Scroop, John Lisle, William Say, Valentine Walton, Thomas Harrison, Edward Whally, John Barkstead, Edmund Ludlow, Sir Michael Livesey, John Okey, John Hewson, William Goffe, Cornelius Holland, Thomas Challoner, John Carew, John Jones, Miles Corbet, Gregory Clement, Thomas Scott, William Crawley, Nicholas Love, John Dixwell, Daniel Blagrove, John Cook, Andrew Broughton, Edward Dendy, William Hewlet, Hugh Peters, Francis Hacker, Daniel Axtell, or any of them, nor to those Two or either of them disguised upon the Scaffold the Thirtieth of January, 1648, erected before White-Hall. All which Persons, for being Instrumental in the Murder of the late King, are wholly excluded.

But in regard the Nineteen first mentioned rendred themselves, according to a Declaration of the 6th of June, 1660. and thereby pretended to some Favour, it is Enacted, That if the said Owen Rowe, and the rest so first mentioned are Attainted, their Execution should be suspended, until the King and Parliament should order the same. (Only Adrian Scroop, though he was one of those that rendrd themselves according to the forementioned Declaration, yet in regard at the time of presenting himself to the Speaker of the House of Commons in pursuance thereunto, in a Discourse with Sir Richard Brown, then Lord Major Elect of London, and a Member of that House, he uttered some words tending to a Justification of the Murder of the King, wherewith Brown acquainted the Parliament, he was therefore put under the same Qualification as those that had not so rendred themselves, because of his Impenitency.)

13. 'Oliver Cromwell, Henry Ireton, John Bradshaw, and Thomas Pride, (though dead) were excepted, and the Lands and Goods, Rights and Trusts of them, and of One and Twenty others deceased, (viz.) Isaac Ewer, Sir John Danvers, Sir Thomas Maleverer, William Purefoy, John Blackiston, Sir William Constable, Richard Dean, Francis Allen, Peregrine Pelham, John Moor, John Alred, Humphrey Edwards, Sir Gregory Norton, John Ven, Thomas Andrews, Anthony Stapeley, Thomas Horton, John Fry, Thomas Hammond, Philip Skippon, and Sir John Bourchier, were made subjects to such Penalties and Forfeitures as by another Act to be passed should be ordained.

14. 'Moreover, William Lord Mounson, Sir Henry Mildmay, Sir James Harrington, and Robert Wallop, were reserved to such Pains, Penalties and Forfeitures, as by the said Act to be passed should be inflicted on them, not extending to life.

These were of the number of the Kings Judges but in regard they did not Sign the Warrant for Summoning the pretended Court, nor the Warrant for the Execution of his Majesty, their Lives were spared.

Phelps, who was a Clark in that Court, was put into the same Condition, as also Sir Arthur Haslerigg; who though he was not one of the Actors in that Tragedy, was as malicious an Enemy to the King, as any of the rest.

15. 'Hutchinson and Lassels, two others of the Judges, were made incapable to execute any Place of Trust, and Lassels to pay to the King one Years value of his Estate. Which Favours were extended to them for reasons before expressed.

16. 'Oliver S. John who had been Chief Justice of the Common-Pleas to Oliver Cromwell, and Seventeen others named in the Act, active Instruments in the late Usurpations, were to be excluded from any benefit by this Act, if they accepted or should execute any Office Ecclesiastical, Civil or Military, in England, Wales, or Berwick, from the First of September in the Year 1660.

'And all that had given Sentence of Death in any of the late Illegal High-Courts of Justice, or Signed any Warrant for Execution of any person there condemned (except Colonel Richard Ingoldsby, and Colonel Matthew Thomlinson) were disabled from being Members in any Parliament after the said First day of September, or bear any Office in England or Wales.

17. 'All Trustees in a pretended Act made in the Year 1649 concerning Tythes appropriate, Fee-Farm Rents, and First-Fruits, &c. and their Heirs, were to be accomptable for such of the same as had not been imployed according to the said Act; Nevertheless, no Minister or School-Master, or other person for whose benefit the said Act was made, were to be accomptable.

18. 'The Act Pardons not Bonds taken in his late Majesties Name before 1642 for securing any proper debt of any Servant, or Receiver of the Kings Revenues, if they had not been paid to, or by order of some lawful or pretended authority: Nor no person, his Heirs, Executors, &c. who had not paid their proportion of a Summ of 150000*l.* (agreed to be paid as a Composition from the Farmers of several Customs illegally taken) or ought to have been contributory thereunto; but that the Estates of the dead as well as of the living, of such persons who ought to have been Contributory, in whose possession soever (Purchasers Bona fide upon valuable considerations only excepted,) shall be chargeable with their Proportions, as if the Act had never been made.

'Likewise all Arrears of Excise of Beer, Ale, or other Inland or Native Commodities, since the 24th of June, 1659. are unpardoned, and all Monies due from any Officers or Souldiers for Free-Quarter, since the 20th of July in the same Year, or Monies borrowed by Officers for preventing of Free-Quarter.

19. 'No Conveyance or Bargain or Sale, Estate, Interest, or Trust, or Limitation of Use or Uses of any manner of Lands, Tenements or Hereditaments not being Crown-Lands, or Church-Lands, nor Lands sold or disposed for pretended Delinquencies by pretence of any Act or Ordinance since the first of January 1641. nor any Statute, Judgment, or Recognizance had, made, acknowledged, or suffered to any person or persons, Bodies Politick or Corporate, before the 29th of September, 1659. by any of the persons in this Act by name expressed, or their Heirs, or by any claiming by, from, or under them, (other than the Wives, Children, or heirs of such persons) or any of them for Monies Bona fide to them or any of them paid or lent, nor any Conveyance or Estate made before the 25th of April, 1660. by any persons to any such person excepted by name as aforesaid, in Trust or for the benefit of any Persons, Bodies Politick or Corporate (not excepted by name as aforesaid) shall be defeated, impeached, or made void.

20. 'Lastly, No persons were to be indemnified who had entred into any Lands, Tenements and Hereditaments, called Fabrick-Lands, or possessed themselves of any Rents or Revenues given for the repair of any Cathedral or other Church, or who sacrilegiously enriched themselves by the converting of the Plate, Utensils, and Materials of or belonging to such Churches, to their private use, for, or in respect of the said Crimes only.

The Act for a Perpetual Anniverfary does Enact; 'That in all succeeding Ages, the 29th of May be Celebrated in every Church and Chappel for his Majesty's Restoration.

The ACT for Observation of a perpetual Anniverfary.

'Chappel in England, and the Dominions thereof, by rendering Thanks to God for the King's peaceable Restoration to the actual possession and exercise of his Legal Authority over his Subjects. And all Ministers are to read the Act at Morning-Prayer the Lords Day next before that Day, to give notice for the observation thereof.

A time prefixt by his Majesty for the Adjournment of the present Parliament.

The King after the passing these Acts, gave the Parliament notice, that on the 13th of September, he would have them to Adjourn to the sixth of November following; whereupon they were very diligent to compleat some Bills under consideration. That which was of most importance for the Peace of the Kingdom, was a Bill for the speedy disbanding the Army and Garrisons, which they were very earnest in. The King intended to have made it a Session by Prorogation; but upon application made to him, to shew the inconvenience thereof at that time, because of many Bills and other matters of great Concernment depending, which would thereby be vacated, he consented to an Adjournment.

The Parliament having taken notice of the Kings Wants, intimated in his last Speech at the passing of the forementioned Acts, provided for his Supply: In the next place they likewise took care that the Army should be supplied with Pay till they were disbanded; which was another of the particulars of that Speech.

Twenty two Acts more; 14 private, and 8 publick, Sign'd by his Majesty.

And now all things being ready for an Adjournment, the King on the 13th of September, which was the day appointed, came to the House of Lords, and there gave his Royal Assent to 14 private, and 8 publick Acts of Parliament.

The Private were.

1. An Act for the restoring of the Marquess of Hertford to the Dukedom of Somerset.
2. An Act for the necessary Maintenance of the Work of Draining the great Level of the Fens.
3. An Act to restore the Earl of Inchequin all his Honours and Lands in Ireland.
4. An Act for to restore to William Marquess of Newcastle, all his Estate whereof he was in possession the 20th of May, 1642. or at any time since.
5. An Act for settling the Priory of Watton, and other Lands in Yorkshire, belonging to the Earl of Winchelsea, in the hands of Trustees, to pay his Debts.
6. An Act for the restoring of Sir George Lane to the Mannours of Rachline and Lisdruff, and other Lands in Ireland.
7. An Act to restore Charles Lord Gerrard, Baron of Brandon, to all his Estate whereof he was in possession the 20th of May, 1642. or at any time since.
8. An Act for the restoring to the Lord Culpeper, Baron of Thorfway, all the Estate whereof his Father was possessed on the 20th of May, 1642. or at any time after, which have not been since sold or aliened by his said Father by Acts and Assurances to which himself was party and consenting.
9. An Act to inable Augustine and William Skinner to sell Lands for payment of Debts.
10. An Act for the Incorporating the Master and Wardens of Haberdashers, London, to be Governours of the Free-School and Alms-House in New-port in Shropshire, of the Foundation of William Adams, and for setting Lands on them for the Maintenance thereof, and other Charitable Uses.

11. An Act for inabling Sir George Booth, Baronet, to make Leases and Sales of part of his Estate.

12. An Act for Regulating of the Trade of Bay-making in the Dutch Bay-Hall in Colchester.

13. The other two private Bills, were one of them to Naturalize Dorothea Helena Countess of Derby, Emelia Countess of Ossery, Margaret Lady Culpeper, and a Son and a Daughter of Katherine Stanhop Countess of Chesterfield, by John Kirkhoven Lord of Henslet in Holland.

14. And the other for Naturalizing Peter de la Pierre alias Peters, and John de la Pierre alias Peters.

Of these Acts, we think it unnecessary to name more than the Titles, as being not of publick Concernment: and every of the Titles are not here exactly inserted, it being sufficient for publick use, to describe so much of them as may inform Posterity of their tendency, and that such Acts were then passed; whereby those that are concerned, may be directed to a more curious search.

The Publick ACTS were:

1. An Act for the speedy Disbanding of the Army and Garrisons.

The Title of this Act does so much express the use of it, that we shall omit to mention more of it here; and the rather, because it was in a few Months fully executed.

2. An Act for the supplying and explaining certain defects in an Act for the speedy provision of Money for Disbanding and Paying off the Forces of this Kingdom both by Sea and Land.

We have already given you an abbreviation of that Act, whereof this last is Explanatory, (which was the Poll-Bill lately described) and to which this being only relating, in reference to the supply of some of its defects, we shall not need to enlarge thereon.

3. An Act for raising seven score thousand pounds for the compleat Disbanding of the Army.

The Parliament finding the Poll-Bill to rise much short of expectation, from the failure of a due and exact execution of it, they passed this Act, which ordained the Money to be raised in two Months from the first of November, 1660. (viz.) 70000 l. per Menssem.

4. An Act for the speedy raising of 70000 l. for the present supply of his Majesty.

This Money was to be paid in one Month from the 29th of September following.

5. An Act to prevent Frauds and Concealments of his Majesties Customs and Subsidies.

This Act was but to continue in force till the end of the first Session of the next Parliament.

6. An Act for the Confirming and Restoring of Ministers.

This Act stopt the Clamours of many Ecclesiastical persons that had defective Titles to their Cures; and the goodness of the King was very much celebrated by his Consent to it. Wherefore 1660. fore it will not be amiss to give a brief touch of the Heads thereof.

An Act for Confirming and Restoring of Ministers.

It Enacts, 'That every Ecclesiastical person or Minister Ordained by any Ecclesiastical persons before December the 25th last past, being 24 years of age, having not renounced his Ordination, who hath been since January the first, 1642. placed in, and in actual possession of any Ecclesiastical Benefice, with the Cure of Souls, in England, Wales, or Berwick upon Tweed, which hath been void by death, or any other avoidance, since that time, and before the 25th of December last past, and was then in possession, and received the Profits being in the Kings gift, or of his Father, or of any Arch-Bishop, Bishop, Dean and Chapter, Prebend, Arch-Deacon, Body Politique or Corporate, or other person, other than such hereby restored, is declared lawful Incumbent.

'Every voluntary Resignation of a Benefit to the Patron, or any pretended Power since the said first day of January, to be good, as if made to the Competent Ordinary.

'No Presentation is to be construed to be an Usurpation in Law, to the prejudice of any that shall have right to Present.

'Every Ecclesiastical person formerly Sequestered or Ejected after lawful Presentation and perception of the profits, that hath not subscribed any Petition to bring the late King to Trial, or by any Act endeavoured or justified the Murder of the said King, or declared his Judgment against Infant-Baptism, by Preaching, Writing, Printing, or constant refusal to Baptize, shall be restored to the possession thereof, at or before the 25th day of December next ensuing; and every Ecclesiastical person to be removed, may enjoy the Profits to that day.

There be many other Clauses and Provisions in this Bill, too long to be here inserted; and so much the less important, in regard by some subsequent Laws, the greatest part of the whole was in a manner repeal'd.

The substance of the Act for incouraging of Navigation.

7. 'An Act for incouraging Shipping and Navigation: Wherein it is Enacted, That from the first of December, 1660. no Commodities shall be Imported or Exported out of any Lands, Islands, Plantations or Territories, belonging unto, or which may belong to his Majesty, his Heirs and Successors, in Asia, Africa, or America, in any other Vessel but such as belong unto the people of England, Ireland, Wales, or Berwick, or are of them built, or do belong to them as the right Owners, and whereof the Master and three fourths of the Mariners are English, under penalty of the loss of all the Goods Imported or Exported in other Vessels, as also of the Vessels, with all its Guns, Furniture, Tackle, Ammunition and Apparel, one third to his Majesty, his Heirs and Successors; one third to the Governour of such Lands, Islands, Plantations or Territories, in case the Ship or Goods be there seized; and the other third part unto him that shall seize, inform, or sue for the same in any Court of Record, by Bill, Information, Plaint or Action, wherein no Essoin, Protection, or Wager of Law shall be allowed. And all Captains, and Commanders at Sea, by Commission from the King or his Successors, are required to bring in all

'Ships and Vessels so offending, and deliver them into the Court of Admiralty, to be proceeded against; and in case of Condemnation, one Moiety is to be divided to the use of the Admiral and Commander, and their Companies, according to the Rules in case of Prize, and the other to the King and his Successors. With many other Clauses and Provisoos tending much to the advancement of the English Manufacture.

8. The Eighth Publick Act was, An Act for enabling Souldiers of the Army to exercise Trades. A very grateful Law to many of the Inferiour Officers and Souldiers, and a good preparatory to their Disbanding; for many of them had been Apprentices, and without some such Provision, might have been left without any way of subsistence, when Arms were out of their hands.

The King made a short Speech to both Houses of Parliament at the passing of these Bills, full of Sweetness, according to the affable temper of his Nature.

He thanked them for their general Care of the Publick, and other particular respects to him, in that for his Satisfaction they had made provision to pay off the Army whilest they were Disbanding, thereby to prevent Free-Quarter: Adding, That though he kindly accepted their Present of Money, he would not imploy any of it for the supply of his own occasions, till he should be assured the Publick had no need of it. He likewise took notice of the Bill concerning the Duke of Somerset, who, he said, had merited as much of the King his Father, and himself, as a Subject could do; and that he was none of those who think that Subjects by performing their Duties in any extraordinary manner, do not oblige their Princes to reward them in an extraordinary manner: Nevertheless, he said, it seemed to be of an extraordinary nature; and indeed we do not remember any President in Story of the like: But the King was pleased to add, That he hoped no man would envy this Duke, because he had done what a good Master should do to such a Servant.

After which, his Majesty referr'd to the Chancellor to speak of many other things which he had to recommend to them: For in this time of their Recess, the Army was to be Disbanding, whereof many discourses had been spread abroad by disaffected persons. Some said the King would keep them up; and others, that they would not suffer themselves to be disbanded. And though he had passed an ACT to confirm Ministers, yet farther order was to be taken in reference to Church-Government; and particularly in respect to tender Consciences: as likewise about purchases and sales of Publick Lands, which had without any issue much taken up the time of both Houses; and therefore since the Parliament Adjourned before any thing in these Affairs was effected, it was expedient to satisfy the People with the Kings Intentions therein: Of which, and many other matters of great Concernment to the good and quiet of the Kingdom, the Chancellor in a most Excellent Speech expressed himself as followeth.

My Lords and Gentlemen,
THE King tells you, He hath Commanded me to say many Particulars to You: and the truth is, he hath charg'd me with many, that

My Lord Chancellors Speech to the Two Houses.

that I have great reason to fear, that I shall stand in much need of his Mercy, for omitting many things he hath given me in Command, at least, for delivering them in more disorder and confusion, than matters of such moment and importance ought to be to such an Assembly, for which the King himself hath even a kind of Reverence, as well as an extraordinary Kindness.

I am to mention some things he hath done already, and many things he intends to do during this Recess, that you may see how well content soever he is, that you should have Ease, and Pleasure, and Refreshment, he hath designed Work enough for himself.

The King hath thanked you for the provision you have made, that there may be no Quarter during the time the Army shall be disbanding; and hath told you what he will do with that Money you have given him, if there should want wherewith to disband it. And now I hope you will all believe that his Majesty will consent to the disbanding. He will do so; and yet he doth not take it unkindly at their hands, who have thought that his Majesty would not disband this Army. It was a sober and rational jealousy; no other Prince in Europe would be willing to disband such an Army; an Army to which Victory is intailed, and which, humanly speaking, could hardly fail of Conquest wheresoever he should lead it: And if God had not restored his Majesty to that rare felicity, as to be without apprehension of danger at home, or from abroad, and without an ambition of taking from his Neighbors what they are possessed of, Himself would never disband this Army: An Army, whose order and discipline, whose sobriety and manners, whose courage and success, hath made it famous and terrible over the whole World: An Army of which the King and his Two Royal Brothers may say, as the Noble Grecian said of Aeneas,

—Stetimus tela aspera contra

*Contulimusque manus; experto credite, quantus
In Clypeum assurgat, quo turbine torqueat hastam.*

They have all three, in several Counties, found themselves engaged in the midst of these Troops, in the heat and rage of Battle; and if any common Souldier (as no doubt many may) will demand the old Romans Priviledge for having encountred Princes single, upon my Conscience he will find both Favour and Preferment. They have all three observ'd the discipline, and felt, and admired, and loved the courage of this Army, when they were the worse for it: And I have seen them in a season when there was little else of comfort in their view, refresh themselves with joy that the English had done the great Work, the English had got the day; and then please themselves with the Imagination what Wonders they should perform in the Head of such an Army.

And therefore when his Majesty is so entirely possessed of the affection and obedience of this Army, and when it hath merited so much from him, can it be believ'd or imagined, that he can without some regret part with them? No, My Lords and Gentlemen, he will never part with them, and the only way never to part with them, is to disband them: Should it be otherwise, they must be exposed to the daily importunity of his great Neighbours and Allies; and how could he refuse to lend them his Troops, of which he hath no need himself? His Majesty knows they are too good Englishmen, to wish that a standing Army should be kept up in the Bowels of their own Country, that they who did but in Bello Pacis gerere Negotium, and who, whilst an Army liv'd like good Husband-men in the Country, and good Citizens in the City, will now become really such, and take delight in the benefit of that Peace they have so honestly and so wonderfully brought to pass. The King will part with them as the most indulgent Parents part with their Children for their Education, and for their Preferment; he will prefer them to disbanding, and prefer them by disbanding; and will always retain such a kindness for them, and such a memory of the service they have done him, that both Officers and Souldiers, after they are disbanded, shall always find such countenance, favour, and reward from his Majesty, that he doubts not but if he should have occasion to use their service, they will again resort to him with the same alacrity, as if they had never been disbanded: And if there be any so ill amongst them (as there can be but very few, if any) who will forfeit the Favour and Protection they may have from him, by any withstanding his Majesties Commands, and the full and declared Sense of the Kingdom, his Majesty is confident they will be as odious to their Companions, as they can be to any other honest men.

My Lords and Gentlemen, I am in the next place by the Kings Command, to put you in mind of the Act of Indemnity, not of any Grants or Concessions, or Releases he made to you in that Act; (I have nothing of that in Charge: No Prince hath so excellent a Memory to forget the Favours he doth;) but of what he hath done against you in that Act, how you may be undone by that Act, if you are not very careful to perform the Obligations he hath laid upon you in it: The Clause I am to put you in mind of is this; And to the intent and purpose that all Names and Terms of distinction may likewise be put into utter Oblivion; Be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That if any person or persons within the space of three years next ensuing, shall presume maliciously to call, or alledge, or object, against any other persons, any Name or Names, or other words of reproach, any way leading to revive the memory of the late differences, or the occasion thereof, that then every such person so, as aforesaid offending, shall forfeit, &c. It is no matter for the Penalty, it is too cheap a one, the King wishes it had been greater, and therefore hath by his Just Prerogative (and 'tis well for us he hath such a Prerogative) added another Penalty more insupportable, even his high displeasure against all who shall swerve from this Clause in the Act: Give me leave to tell you, That as any name or names, or other words of reproach, are expressly against the Letter, and punishable accordingly; so evil and envious looks, murmuring and discontented hearts, are as directly against the Equity of this Statute, a direct breach of the Act of Indemnity, and

and ought to be punished too, and I believe they may be so. You know Kings are in some sense called Gods, and so they may in some degree be able to look into mens hearts; and God hath given us a King, who can look as far into mens hearts as any Prince alive; and he hath great skill in Physiognomy too; you would wonder what Calculations he hath made from thence: and no doubt if he be provoked by evil looks to make a further inquiry into mens hearts, and finds those corrupted with the passions of envy and uncharitableness, he will never chuse those hearts to trust and rely upon. He hath given us a Noble and Princely example, by opening and stretching his Arms to all who are worthy to be his Subjects, worthy to be thought English-men, by extending his Heart with a Pious and grateful joy to find all his Subjects at once in his Arms, and himself in theirs; and shall we fold our Arms towards one another, and contract our hearts with envy and malice to each other, by any sharp memory of what hath been unneighbourly or unkindly done heretofore? What is this but to Rebel against the Person of the King, against the excellent Example and Virtue of the King, against the known Law of the Land, this blessed Act of Oblivion?

My Lords and Gentlemen, The King is a Suitor to you, makes his Suit very heartily, that you will joyn with him in restoring the whole Nation to its Primitive temper and Integrity, to its old good Manners, its old good Humor, and its old good Nature; Good Nature, a Virtue so peculiar to you, so appropriated by God Almighty to this Nation, that it can be translated into no other Language, hardly practis'd by any other People; and that you will by your Example, by the Candor of your Conversation, by your Precepts, and by your Practice, and by all your Interest, teach your Neighbours and your Friends, how to pay a full obedience to this Clause of the Statute, how to learn this Excellent Art of Forgetfulness.

Let them remember, and let us all remember how ungracious, how indecent, how ugly the insolence and fierceness, the brutishness of their Enemies appeared to them, and we may piously and reasonably believe, that Gods Indignation against them, for their want of Bowels, for their not being English-men, (for they had the hearts of Pagans and Infidels) sent a Whirl-wind in a moment to blow them out of the World; that is, out of a capacity to do more mischief in the World; except we practice their Vices, and do that our selves, which we pretend to detest them for.

Let us not be too much ashamed, as if what hath been done amiss, proceeded from the Humour, and the Temper, and the Nature of our Nation. The Astrologers have made us a fair Excuse, and truly I hope a true one, All the Motions of these last twenty years have been unnatural, and have proceeded from the evil influence of a Malignant Star; And let us not too much despise the influence of the Stars. And the same Astrologers assure us, that the Malignity of the Star is expired, the good Genius of this Kingdom is become Superiour, and hath mastered that Malignity; and our own good old Stars govern us again; and their influence is so strong, that with our help they will repair in a year, what hath been decaying in twenty: And they only shall have no excuse from the Star, who continue this Malignity, and own all the ill that is past to be their own, by continuing it, and improving it for time to come.

If any body here, or any-where else, be too much exalted with what he hath done, or what he hath suffered, and from thence thinks himself warranted to reproach others, let him remember the Story of Nicephorus; it is an excellent Story, and very applicable to such distempers; He was a Pious and Religious man, and for his Piety and Religion was Condemned to the Fire: When he was led to Execution, and when an old Friend who had done him injury enough, fell at his feet, and asked his pardon, the Poor man was so Elated with the Triumph he was going unto, with the Glory of Martyrdom, that he refused to be reconciled unto him; upon which he was disappointed of his end; and for his uncharitableness, the Spirit of God immediately forsook him, and he Apostatized from the Faith,

Let all those who are too proud of having been, as they think, less faulty than other men, and so are unwilling to be reconciled to those who have offended them, take heed of the Apostacy of Nicephorus, and that those fumes of Envy, and Uncharitableness, and Murmuring, do not so far transport and intoxicate them, that they fall into those very Crimes, they value themselves for having hitherto declined.

But, My Lords and Gentlemen, whilst we conspire together to execute faithfully this part of the Bill, to put all old Names and Terms of distinction into utter Oblivion, let us not find new Names and Terms to keep up the same, or a worse distinction: If the old reproaches of Cavalier, and Roundhead, and Malignant, be committed to the Grave, let us not find more significant and better words, to signify worse things; let not Piety and Godliness grow into terms of reproach, and distinguish between the Court, and the City, and the Country; and let not Piety and Godliness be measured by a morosity in manners.

An affection of Gesture, a new mode and tone of speaking, at least, let not our Constitutions and Complexions make us be thought of a contrary party, and because we have not an affected austerity in our looks, that we have no Piety in our hearts; very merry men have been very godly men, and if a good Conscience be a continual Feast, there is no reason but men may be merry at it.

You Mr. Speaker have this day made a Noble Present to the King; do you think, that if you and your worthy Companions had brought it up with folded Arms, down-cast looks, with sighs, and other instances of desperation, it would not have been a very Melancholick Present? Have not your frank and dutiful expressions, that cheerfulness and vivacity in your looks, render'd it much more acceptable, much more valuable?

No Prince in Christendom loves a cheerful giver so well as God Almighty does, and he of all gifts a Cheerful heart; and therefore I pray

'pray let not a cloudy or discontented face be 'the only or the best sign of Piety and Devotion
'in the heart.

'I must ask you pardon for misplacing much of 'this Discourse, which I should have mentioned
'when I came to speak of the Ministers Bill;
'They, I hope, will endeavour to remove those 'new marks of Distinction and Reproaches, and
'keep their Auditors from being imposed upon
'by such Characters and Descriptions. The King
'hath passed this Act very willingly, and done
'much to the end of this Act before, yet hath 'willingly admitted you to be sharers and Part'ners with him in the Obligation: I may say 'confidently, his Majesty hath never denied his 'Confirmation to any man in possession who 'hath asked it; and they have all had the effect
'of it, except such who, upon examination and 'inquiry, appeared not worthy of it, and such
'who, though they are Pardoned, cannot yet
'think themselves worthy to be prefer'd. His 'Majesty well knows that by this Act he 'hath gratified and obliged many worthy and 'Pious men, who have contributed much to his 'Restauration, and who shall always receive 'fresh evidences of his Majesties Favour and 'Kindness; but he is not sure that he may like'wise have gratified some who did neither con'tribute to his coming in, nor are yet glad he is
'in; how comes it else to pass, that he receives 'such frequent Information of Seditious Ser'mons in the City and in the Country, in which 'all Industry is used to alienate the affections of 'the People, and to infuse Jealousies into them
'of the King and his Government; they talk of 'introducing Popery, of Evil Counsellours, and 'such other old Calumnies as are pardoned by
'this Act of Indemnity.

'His Majesty told you, when he was last
'here, That Rigour and Severity he will here'after use, how contrary soever it is to his Na'ture in these cases, and conjured you, My
'Lords and Gentlemen, to concur with him in 'this Just and Necessary Severity; which I am 'sure you will do with your utmost Vigilance;
'and that you will believe that too much ill
'cannot befall those who do the best they can to 'corrupt his Majesties Nature, and to extinguish 'his Mercy.

'My Lords and Gentlemen, I told you I was to 'acquaint you with some things his Majesty in'tends to do during this Recess, that you may see
'he will give no intermission to his own Thoughts
'for the Publick good, though for a time he 'dispenses with your assistance.

'He doth consider the infinite importance the 'improvement of Trade must be to this King'dom, and therefore his Majesty intends to esta-
'lish a Council of Trade, consisting of some Prin'cipal Merchants of the several Companies, to 'which he will add some Gentlemen of Quality
'and Experience: And for their greater Honour
'and Encouragement, some of my Lords of his 'own Privy Council.

'In the next place, his Majesty hopes, that by
'a well-settled Peace and Gods great Blessing
'upon him and You, this Nation will in a short 'time flourish to that degree that the Land of 'Canaan did, when Esau found it necessary to 'part from his Brother; For their Riches were more than that they might dwell together, and the Land wherein they were could not bear them, because of their Cattel. We have been our selves very near this Pinnacle of Happiness; and the hope and contemplation that we may be so again, disposes the King to be very sollicitous for the Improvement and Prosperity of his Plantations abroad, where there is such large room for the Industry and Reception of such who shall desire to go thither. And therefore his Majesty intends likewise to Erect and Establish a Council for those Plantations, in which persons well-qualified, shall be wholly intent upon the good and advancement of those Plantations.

'There are two other Particulars which I am commanded to mention, which were both mentioned and recommended to You by his Majesty in his Declaration from Breda: The one, for the confirmation of Sales, or other recompence for Purchasers: The other for the Composing those differences and distempers in Religion which have too much disturbed the Peace of the Kingdom. Two very weighty Particulars, in which his Majesty knows you have spent much time, and concerning which he should have heard from you before this time, if you had not met with great difficulties in the disquisition of either.

'For the First, his Majesty hath not been without much thought upon the Argument, and hath done much towards the accommodation of many particular persons; and you shall not be at your Journeys end, before his Majesty will put that business concerning Sales into such a way of dispatch, that he doubts not, you will find a good progress made in it before your coming together again; and I believe the persons concerned will be very much to blame if they receive not good satisfaction: and some of you, who stay in Town, shall be advised and consulted with, in that Settlement.

'The other of Religion, is a sad Argument indeed, it is a consideration that must make every Religious heart to bleed, to see Religion, which should be the strongest Obligation & Cement of Affection, and Brotherly Kindness and Compassion, made now, by the perverse wranglings of passionate & froward men, the ground of all Animosity, Hatred, Malice and Revenge.
And this unruly and unmanly passion (which no Question the Divine Nature exceedingly abhors) sometimes, and I fear too frequently, transports those who are in the right, as well as those who are in the wrong, and leaves the latter more excusable than the former, when men, who find their Manners and dispositions very conformable in all the necessary obligations of humane Nature, avoid one anothers conversation, and grow first unsociable, and then uncharitable to each other, because one cannot think as the other doth; And from this separation We entitle God to the Patronage of, and concernment in, our fancies and distinction, and purely for his fake hate one another heartily.

'It was not so of old, when one of the most Ancient Fathers of the Church tells Us, That Love and Charity was so signal and eminent in the Primitive Christians, that it even drew admiration and envy from their adversaries.

Vide (inquiunt) ut invicem se diligunt ! Their Adversaries, in that in which they most agreed in, their very prosecution of them, had their passions and animosities amongst themselves; they were only Christians that Loved, and Cherished, and Comforted, and were ready to die for one another. Quid nunc illi dicerent Christiani, si nostra viderent tempora? says the incomparable Grotius; How would they look upon our sharp and virulent Contentions in the Debates of Christian Religion, and the bloody Wars that have proceeded from those Contentions, whilst every one pretended to all the marks which are to attend upon the true Church except only that which is inseparable from it, Charity to one another.

My Lords and Gentlemen, this Disquisition hath cost the King many a Sigh, many a sad hour, when he hath considered the almost irreparable reproach the Protestant Religion hath undergone from the Divisions and Distractions which have been so notorious within this Kingdom; What pains he hath taken to compose them, after several Discourses with Learned and Pious men of different persuasions, you will shortly see by a Declaration he will publish upon that occasion; by which you will see his great indulgence, to those who can have any Protection from Conscience, to differ with their Brethren. And I hope God will so bless the Candor of his Majesty in the Condescensions he makes, that the Church as well as the State will return to that Unity and Unanimity, which will make both King and People as happy as they can hope to be in this World.

My Lords and Gentlemen, I shall conclude with the King's hearty Thanks to you, not only for what you have done towards him, which hath been very Signal; but for what you have done towards each other; for the Excellent Correspondence you have maintain'd, for the very seasonable deference and condescension you have had for each other, which will restore Parliaments to the veneration they ought to have. And since his Majesty knows that you all desire to please him, you have given him ample evidence that you do so; He hath appointed me to give you a sure receipt to attain that good end; it is a Receipt of his own prescribing, and therefore it is not like to fail.

Be but pleased your selves, and persuade others to be so; contrive all the ways imaginable for your own Happiness, and you will make Him the best pleased and the most happy Prince in the World.

After this Speech the King retired, and both Houses of Parliament Adjourned themselves to the sixth of November.

In the ACT for the speedy Disbanding of the Army and Garrisons, That Affair was committed to Twelve Commissioners, (Six whereof were Lords, and Six Commons) or to any Three of them, whereof one of the Commissioners named by the Lords, and one named by the Commons, were to be Two: And that they might not go far about for the Money, The Treasurers at War, and Treasurer named in the ACT for the speedy Provision of Money for Disbanding the Army, were to Issue Moneys upon their Warrant.

All the Regiments and Garrisons were Disbanded by Lot, except four Companies in Hull, four in Berwick, and four in Carlisle, which were reserved to be last reduced: And the Regiments belonging to the Dukes of York and Gloucester, and the Lord General, were not to be Disbanded till after all the other Regiments and Garrisons, except the Three before-mentioned. There were Disbanded in England and Wales, Eighteen Regiments of Foot, consisting of a Thousand Souldiers in each Regiment, besides Officers and thirteen Regiments of Horse, having six hundred Souldiers in each Regiment besides Officers, together with the General's Life-Guard of Horse, consisting of Two Hundred, and about Fifty Garrisons which had not in them less than 5000 Souldiers, besides Officers. And in Scotland Three Regiments and Two Companies of Foot, and Two Regiments, except one Troop of Horse, and about Thirteen Garrisons; but most of these Garrisons were not under particular Establishment, as those in England, but were mann'd by Companies out of the respective Regiments. The King, out of his own Bounty, gave a Weeks Pay over and above their full Arrears to all the Troops and Companies Disbanded; Which was very Thankfully accepted by them.

Moreover, he was so well satisfied with the Services of many of his Subjects in Ireland, who Joyned with the Duke of Albemarle, for his Restauration, that he Conferred Rewards and Honour upon many of them according to the report of their merit; amongst these, Sir Charles Coote was made Earl of Montrath; Roger Lord Broug-hill advanced to the Dignity of Earl of Orrery; Colonel Richard Coote, a Brother to the Earl of Montrath, was created Baron of Collowney; and Sir John King, Baron of Kingston; and shortly after, Sir John Clotworthy was made Viscount Massarine.

Besides the many Addresses that were made to the King by his own Subjects generally from all parts of his Dominions, there also came over Forrain Agents and Embassadors from several of the greatest Princes and States of Europe, to Complement his Majesty in the Name of their Masters, touching his happy Restauration to his Royal Dignity and Government: From the Marquess of Brandenburg came the Baron of Pelnitz, Master of the Horse to his Highness. From Frederick Prince Palatine of the Rhine, Cozen-German to his Majesty of England, came Christopher Cloß of Keiembergh, Captain of his Guards. From the King of Denmark came the Lord Frederick Van Alefeld, Deputy-Governour of the Dukedoms of Sleswick and Holstein. But never did any Embassador arrive in England in a more Splendid and gallant Equipage than the Prince of Ligne, who being sent Embassador to our King from the King of Spain, seems to have come only upon a Gratulatory and Complemental Address, in regard there needed no Negotiation about any Peace between England and Spain, forasmuch as upon the coming in of his present Majesty, there follow'd by consequence a reviving of that Peaceful & Friendly Correspondence which had formerly been between these Two Crowns

The KING complemented by the Embassadors and Agents of Forrain Princes.

Crowns in the time of the late King. And to this purpose his Majesty set forth a Proclamation, Requiring, that (whereas the King of Spain had Commanded throughout his Dominions a Cessation from all Hostility towards this Crown, and had proposed, that the Publication thereof might be on both sides agreed on by a fixt day) all Acts of Hostility should likewise cease on our parts, towards the Subjects of that Crown; which Cessation was to be reckoned as taking beginning from the day of his Majesties Arrival in England, being the 25th of May, and that all Goods and Merchandizes which had been taken from that time should be restored.

As the occasion of the Prince de Ligne's coming over was only Gratulatory & Complementary, so his stay here was but short; and after his Departure, there remained here as the King of Spains Lieger or Embassador in Ordinary, the Baron of Batteville. In the same manner, on the part of the French was the Count of Soissons, succeeded by Monsieur d'Estrade, who had not been long here, ere an Occasion hapned, which manifested, that the late concluded Peace between these two Kings had not any whit lessened the Jealousie of Honour between them and their old pretensions in point of Precedence: Many troublesome Contests there have formerly been between the Embassadors of these Two Crowns in the Courts of Forrain Princes and States, when they have chanced to be Resident together at the same place; but none more remarkable than that upon Tower-Hill, at the Landing of an Embassador from Sweden, on the 30th of September: Which since it was so prepared & premeditated a Business on both sides, that his Majesty foreseeing it would come to a Quarrel, and out of his accustomed Civility willing to carry himself with an equal and impartial Indifference toward them both, and so far to gratifie their Intentions, as to permit them to put their Retinue into such a posture as they should think fittest, and most becoming their respective pretences: Yet in the mean time taking order for strict Guards to be kept upon the place, for the preventing, as much as might be, of all disturbances; and severely prohibiting any of his own Subjects to intermeddle in the difference, or to take part with either side; was pleased to Command, That the formerly mentioned Mr. Evelyn should, after diligent Enquiry, made concerning the Carriage and Success of that whole Affair, render him a particular Accompt thereof, by drawing up a full Narrative of every Circumstance of that Rencontre: Which being a matter of so rare a kind, and great Importance, We have here thought meet to insert from that Gentlemans more sedulous and ample Collection, as it was by him presented to his Majesty in this following relation:

The manner of the Encounter between the French and Spanish Em-bassadors, at the Landing of the Swedish Embassador.

Upon Monday last, being the 30th of September, about ten in the Morning, the Spanish Embassadors Coach (in which were his Chaplain, with some of his Gentlemen attended by about Forty more of his own Servants in Liveries) was sent down to the Tower-Wharf, and there placed it self near about the Point, where the Ranks or Ordinance determine towards the Gate leading into the Bulwark. Next after him came the Dutch, and (Twelve a Clock past) the Swedish Coach of Honour, disposing of themselves according to their places. About two hours after this (in company with his Majesties Coach Royal) appeared that of the French Ambassadors, wherein were Le Marquis de Strade, Son to the French Ambassador, with several more of his Gentlemen, and, as might be computed, near an Hundred and fifty in Train, whereof above Forty were Horsemen well appointed with Pistols, and (some of them) with Carabines, Musketoons or Fuzies: In this Posture and Equipage stood they expecting upon the Wharf, and as near as might be, approaching to his Majesties Coach, which was opposite to the Stairs. About three in the Afternoon, the Swedish Ambassador being Landed, and received into his Majesties Coach, (which moved leisurely before the rest, and was followed by that of the Swedes) The French Ambassadors Coach endeavoured to go the next, driving as close as possibly they could, and advancing their Party with their Swords drawn, to force the Spaniards from the Guard of their own Coach, which were also putting in for Precedency next the Kings. His Majesties Coach now past, the Spaniards (who held as yet their Rapiers undrawn in their hands) stepping nimbly on either side of the hind-most Wheels of their Masters Coach, drew their Weapons, and shouted, which caused the French Coach-horses to make a Pause: But, when they observed the advantage, which by this the Spanish Ambassadors Coach had gained, being now in file after the Swedes, they came up very near to the Spaniards, and at once, pouring in their shot upon them, together with their Foot (then got before their Coach) fell to it with their Swords; both which the Spaniards received, without removing one jot from their Stations.

During this Demesle (in which the French received some repulse, and were put to a second stand) a bold and dextrous Fellow, and (as most affirm) with a particular Instrument, as well as address, stooping under the bellies of the French Ambassadors Coach-Horses, cut the Ham-strings of two of them, and wounded a third; which immediately falling, the Coach for the present was disabled from advancing farther, the Coachman forced out of his Box, and the Postilion mortally wounded, who falling into the arms of an English Gentleman that stepped in to his succour, was by a Spaniard pierced through his Thigh. This disorder (wherein several were wounded, and some slain) caused those in the French to alight, and so enraged their Party, that it occasioned a second brisk Assault both of Horse and Foot; which being received with extraordinary Gallantry, many of their Horse retreated, and wheel'd off to St. Katherines.

It was in this Skirmish that some Brick-bats were thrown from the edge of the Wharf, which (by a mistake) are said to have been provided by the Spanish Ambassadors Order the day before. But that they were not cast by any of the English, is attested by the general consent of all the Spectators.

In this Interim then (which was near half an hour) the Spanish Coach went forward after his Majesties, with about Twenty of its Retinue following, who still kept their Countenances towards the French, as long as they abode on the Wharf, and that narrow passage of the Bulwark, (where the Contest was very fierce) without disorder: So as the first which appear'd on Tower-Hill (where now they were entering) was his Majesties Coach, followed by the Swedes Ambassadors; and next, by that of Spain, with about twenty four or thirty of his Liveries, still disputing it with a less number of French, who came after them in the Rear.

And here, (besides what were slain with Bullets on the Wharf, and near the Bulwark, where of one was a Valet de Chambre of the Spanish Ambassadors, and six more, amongst which a poor English Plaisterer, and near forty wounded) fell one of the French, who was kill'd just before his Highnesses Life-guard, no one person of the numerous Spectators intermeddling, or so much as making the least noise, or tumult, People or Souldiers, whereof there were three Companies of Foot which stood opposite on the Hill to the Guards of Horse, 'twixt whom the Antagonists lightly skirmished, some fresh Parties of French coming out of several places, and protected by the English, amongst whom they found shelter, till the Spanish Ambassadors Coach having gained and passed the Chain which leads into Crochet-Friers, they desisted, and gave them over.

What-ever disadvantage the French came off with in this Rencontre, wherein, except one man that fought among the Spaniards with a Half-Pike, not any of the English were seen to act any thing that might contribute to the success of one side more than another, till a few of the multitude which stood on that side of the Wharf, being enraged by the Wounds which they received from the shot that came in amongst them, and whereof, 'tis said, some of them afterwards died, were forced to defend themselves with what they found at hand: For so careful was Sir Charles Berkley, Captain of his Royal Highnesses Life-guard, to put in execution what he had in strict Charge from his Majesty, that not a man of the Spectators was suffered with impunity so much as with a Switch in his hand. The French King, from this occasion, gained an advantage to the Prerogative he stood upon, greater than if this contest had not hapned; for whereas this business of Precedence had been hitherto in Controversie between him and Spain, in so much that to prevent all inconveniencies, an Accord had been lately made here between the Spanish Ambassador and the Count of Soissons, that they should assist at no Publick Ceremonies, but upon all such casual Encounters, pass on their way as they fortun'd to meet: The King of France countermanding this Agreement, and sending positive charge to de Strade, not to abate any thing of those Pretensions formerly stood upon; and hearing what ensued upon his Ambassadors executing of his Injunctions, was so incensed thereat, that the quarrel had proceeded to an absolute breach of the late concluded Peace between the two Kingdoms, had not the King of Spain condescended to agree, that thence-forward Precedence should be yielded to the French upon all such like occasions, without any dispute.

The Princess-Royal comes over into England.

On the 23 of this Month, the Princess-Royal of Great Britain having recommended the Interests of her Son the Prince of Aurange to the care of the Lords States of the Netherlands, (who now at length had agreed among themselves to admit this young Prince to the same Dignity and Trust which his Ancestors formerly held in that Commonwealth, of which they had so highly merited) came over into England, invited by his Majesty, and willing once again to see her Native Country from which she had so many years been absent: But her joy to see the King her Brother peaceably Inthroned, was very much allayed by her sorrow for the loss of her Third Brother, Henry of Oatlands Duke of Gloucester, The Death of who in the 21 year of his age (to the great grief the Duke of of the King his Brother, and all those that know- Gloucester. ing and admiring the Princely Vertues of his Youth, had promised Wonders to the World from the hopes of his Elder Age) departed this Life on the 13th of September, being the same day the Parliament adjourned, which was near the space of four Months after his Arrival in England; so that he survived little longer than just to attend upon his Brother to his Throne. He was a Prince excellently accomplish'd, Religious, Learned, Valiant, Wise above his Years, a dutiful & affectionate Brother, a wise Councillor, a good Master, and a true Friend. And as if Fate had so provided, that being himself of the most Noble, he should also in death be accompanied by the most Noble; there died much about the same time, two of the same Order with himself, and next him in Quality, Esme Duke of Lenox, and Richmond, and William Marquess of Hertford, Of the Dukes of Lenox and Somerset. who was also not long before his death restored by his now Majesty to the Ancient Dignity of his Ancestours, being created Duke of Somerset, and also to the Honour he had merited in the time of his late Majesty of being Lord Chancellor of the University of Oxford: In which last Dignity he is succeeded by Sir Edw. Hyde, Lord High-Chancellor of England.

Commissioners having been appointed by the Parliament to pay off and disband the Army and Navy, a speedy and effectual course having been by them taken, as hath been already mentioned, for the paying off and disbanding the several Regiments and Ships as fast as Money came in by the Act of Poll-money, and the other Acts of Assessments made to that end by the Parliament before their Adjournment: In lieu of these disbanded Forces, all the several Counties of the Nation under the Conduct of certain Noblemen, who were constituted the Kings Lieutenants over them, according to the Ancient Custom, were armed with their own Militia or Trained-Bands; not so much in any apprehension of disorder from the Souldiers, for they had so good Officers placed over them by the Lord General, that there was no fear of disorder from them; but lest any seditious persons might think themselves capable of making disturbance, if no armed force should be ready to prevent their mischiefs.

The Militia settled in the several Counties.

And by this means, the Country was both settled into such a Posture of Military Defence; as to be able at a short warning to appear in Arms, and also freed from the continual charge of maintaining a standing Army, whereof there would be no appearance, except in case of Emergent Danger.

As matters of Civil, so likewise those of Ecclesiastical concernment were had in serious regard

Episcopacy revived in England.

regard by his Majesty, who judging the Form of Church-Government which had been establish'd in England from the time of the Reformation, till the late Troubles, to be the most Ancient and decent way of Worship and Discipline, and most tending to Uniformity in Religion, made it one of his first businesses to restore the late extruded Episcopacy to the Dignity and Authority they formerly exercised in the Church of England: To which end, he speedily proceeded to the nomination of such Persons as were approved to be of the most Eminent for Learning and Piety, for the supplying of those Bishops See's, which were become vacant since the first time of the Abrogation of their Power.

In the Month of October, Owen Row, Augustine Garland, and 27 more of the Regicides, Murderers of the late King, excepted out of the Act of Indemnity and Oblivion, were Arraigned at the Old-Baily upon a Commission of Oyer and Terminer, directed to Thomas Allen, Knight and Baronet, Lord Mayor of London, Sir Edward Hide, Lord Chancellour of England.

The Earl of Southampton, the Duke of Somerset, the Duke of Albemarle, the Lord High Steward, the Earl of Lindsey, Earl of Manchester, Earl of Dorset, Earl of Barkshire, Earl of Sandwich, Lord Roberts, the Lord Finch, Denzel Hollis Esquire, Sir Frederick Cornwallis, Knight and Baronet, Sir Charles Berkley Knight, Mr. Secretary Nicholas, Mr. Secretary Morrice, Sir Anthony Ashley Cooper, Arthur Annesly Esquire, Sir Orlando Bridgman, Lord Chief Baron, Mr. Justice Foster, Mr. Justice Mallet, Mr. Justice Hide, Mr. Baron Atkins, Mr. Justice Twisden, Mr. Justice Terrell, Mr. Baron Turner, Sir Harbottle Grimston, Knight and Baronet, Sir William Wild, Knight and Baronet, Recorder of London, Mr. Serjeant Brown, Mr. Serjeant Hale, John Howell Esquire.

The Prosecutors on behalf of his Majesty, were Sir Jeffery Palmer, his Majesties Attorney-General, Sir Heneage Finch, his Majesties Solicitor-General, Sir Edward Turner, Attorney to his Highness the Duke of York, and Wadham Windham Esquire, Edward Shelton Esquire, attended the Clerk of the Crown.

The Prisoners being called, they all pleaded Not Guilty, except Sir Hardress Waller, and Mr. George Fleetwood, who pleaded Guilty: But the Crimes were so odious, and the Proofs so clear, that the Jurors scarce ever went from the Bar to deliberate, but found them all Guilty; and ten of them were Executed, viz. Harrison, Carew, Scot, Clement, Jones, Scroop, Cook, and Peters, at Chairing-Cross; and Hacker and Axtell at Tyburn: William Hulet (who was also found Guilty, being accused to be one of those that in a Frock and Vizard assisted in the horrid Execution of the King, and therefore excepted from Pardon, though not by name) in regard that the Evidence seemed not so clear to the Court, upon their report to the King he had his Reprieve; and all the rest were respited, till the King and Parliament should order their Execution according to the direction in the Act of Indemnity in that behalf.

The King summons a Parliament in Scotland.

The King thought it high time to settle the Peace of Scotland, as well as that of his other Dominions; and in order thereunto, he sum-mon'd a Parliament to meet at Edenburgh the 12th day of December; and by his Proclamation in that Kingdom, signified to all, that he relied so much on the Loyalty, Prudence, and Care of his Parliament, as absolutely to commit to them the Trying and Judging of the Carriage of his Subjects during the late Troubles, concerning which he would receive Addresses and Informations only from his Parliament, or Committee of Estate: To whom in the mean time he recommended the ordering and preparing of that affair, and to whom alone any of his People that were interested, might freely and should only make their Applications, assuring them, that his own Honour once vindicated, and the Ancient Prerogatives of the Crown asserted, he would grant such a full and free Pardon, an Act of Indemnity, as might witness, that he desired nothing more than that his People should be settled with abundance of Happiness, Peace, and Plenty, under his Government.

For the Government of Ireland, he made Sir Maurice Eustace Knight, Lord Chancellour of Ireland, Roger Earl of Orrerey Lord President of Munster, and Charles Earl of Montraish, Lord President of Connought, to be Justices; who governed Affairs there with great Candour and Moderation.

The Sitting again of the Parliament of England drew very near; in the Interim whereof, the King, to manifest his vigilance for the good of his Subjects, according to his Promise at their Adjournment the latter end of October, published his Declaration concerning Ecclesiastical affairs, filled with many gracious Concessions to allay the distempers in Religion of that time; which because it was but temporary, till the Parliament should offer something further to him in reference to those matters, we forbear to mention the particulars thereof. He likewise a few days after emitted a Commission under the Great Seal of England, to several Persons of great Honour and Integrity, to Treat with all Purchasers of Crown and Church-Lands, that none of his People might want any satisfaction which in reason could be allowed them.

The Two Houses of Parliament met the sixth of November, and applied themselves to the making of several Laws for the augmentation of the Kings Revenue, and other matters of great Consideration, in which they were the more diligent and speedy, for that they received intimation from the King, that he intended to dissolve them on the 29th of December. In the mean time, they ordered, that the several Bodies of Oliver Cromwell, John Bradshaw, Henry Ireton, and Thomas Pride, should be taken out of their Graves, and drawn on an Hurdle to Tyburn, to be buried under the Gallows: And on Christmas-Eve, the King went to the House of Lords, and there gave his Royal Assent to two Acts of Parliament; viz. To an Act for a Grant of certain Impositions upon Beer, Ale, and other Liquors, for the increase of his Majesties Revenue, and an Act for the taking away the Court of Wards, and Liveries, and Tenures in Capite, and by Knights Service, and Purveyance, and for settling a Revenue upon his Majesty in Lieu thereof.

The Act for a Grant of certain Impositions, &c. is by several Rates, as Excise upon Beer, Ale, Sider,

The King sets forth a Declaration concerning Ecclesiastical affairs.

The Bodies of Cromwell, Bradshaw, Ireton, and Pride, ordered to be buried under the Gallows.

The King passes the Act for settling of Excise, and taking away the Court of Wards.

Sider, Perry, Metheglin, Strong-Water, or Aqua-Vita, Coffee, Chocolate, Sherbet, and Tea; (Viz.) for Beer, Ale, and such of these as are not Foreign Liquors, they are to be paid by the Brewer, or other person that shall sell the same; And all Foreign Liquors, by the Merchant, or Importer, in ready Money upon Entry, made before the Landing thereof; and these Impositions are to continue by this Law during the Kings Life: But by another Statute made in the same Session, for taking away the Court of Wards and Liveries, and Tenures in Capite, and by Knights Service, and Purveyance, and for settling a Revenue upon his Majesty in lieu thereof; the said Impositions and Rates are in recompence thereof to be paid to his Majesty, his Heirs and Successors for ever.

The Reasons alledged in this Statute, for taking away the Court of Wards, in the Preamble thereof were, because Tenures by Knights Service, either of the King or others, or by Knights Service in Capite, or by Soccage in Capite of the King, and the Consequents upon the same had been much more burthensome, grievous, and prejudicial to the Kingdom, than beneficial to the King: And since the intermission of the said Court from the 24th of February, 1645. many persons had by Will and otherwise made disposal of their Lands held by Knights Service, whereupon divers Questions might arise, unless some seasonable Remedy should be taken to prevent the same, by taking away from the said 24th of February, 1645. the Court of Wards and Liveries, and all Wardships, Liveries, Primer Seisins, and all Ouster le mains, Values, and Forfeitures of Marriages, by reason of any Tenure of the King, or of any other by Knight Service, and all mean Rates and Gifts, Grants or Charges, &c.

The Death of the Princess of Aurange.

Whilst the King was passing these two Acts, his Sister the Princess Mary, Princess of Aurange, died at White-Hall, a Lady of admirable Virtues, and all Princely Endowments; and five days after (viz.) on the 29th day of December in the Evening which was the day of the dissolution of the Parliament) was buried in King Henry the Seventh's Chappel at Westminster.

The Parliament dissolved, and 32 Acts more passed by the King.

Upon which day in the Morning, the King came to the House of Peers, and gave the Royal Assent to twenty private, and twelve publick Acts of Parliament. The private were these following:

1 'An Act for the restoring of Henry Lord Arundel of Worder, to the possession of his Estate.

2 'An Act for Restitution of Thomas Earl of Arundel, Surrey, and Norfolk, to the Title of Duke of Norfolk.

3 'An Act to restore to Wentworth, Earl of Roscomon in Ireland, all the Honours, Castles, Lordships, Lands and Tenements, whereof James Earl of Roscomon his Great Grandfather, or James Earl of Roscomon his Father, were possessed.

10 'An Act for the Naturalization of John Boreel, Esq; Eldest Son of Sir William Boreel, Knight and Baronet.

11 'An Act for the Naturalization of Abraham Wachter.

12 'An Act for the restoring Sir Thomas Crimes, Baronet, to his Estate.

13 'An Act for inabling George Fawnt of Foston, in the County of Leicester, Esq; to sell and convey part of his Lands, for payment of several Debts and Legacies charged upon his Estate by Sir William Fawnt Knight, deceased; and for the raising of Portions for his younger Children, and making his Wives Joynture.

14 'An Act for Naturalizing Francis Hide, and others.

15 'An Act to inable Joseph Micklethwait an Infant, and his Trustees, to sell his Lands for payment of his Fathers Debts.

16 'An Act for raising Portions, and making provision for maintenance of the younger Children of Sir Edward Gostwick.

17 'An Act for confirming the sale of the Mannour of Hitcham, sold to Charles Doe by Sir John Clark, Knight and Baronet, and for settling and disposing other the Lands of the said Sir John Clark, and Dame Philadelphia his Wife.

18 'An Act for the settling of some of the Mannours and Lands of the Earl of Cleveland in Trustees, to be sold for the satisfying of the Debts of the said Earl, and of Thomas Lord Wentworth his Son.

19 'An Act for the disappropriating of the Rectory appropriate of Preston, and uniting and consolidating of the said Rectory, and of the Vicaridge of the Church of Preston, and for the assuring of the Advowson and Right of Patronage of the same unto the Master, Fellows, and Scholars of Emanuel Colledge in Cambridge.

20 'An Act for making the Precinct of Covent-Garden Parochial.

The Publick ACTS were;

1 'An Act for the Attainder of several Persons guilty of the horrid Murther of his late Sacred Majesty King Charles the First.

2 'An Act for the Levying of certain Moneys due upon the Collection for the Protestants of Piedmont.

3 'An Act for Confirmation of Grants and Leases from Colledges and Hospitals.

4 'An Act for the Levying of the Arrears of the 12 Months Assessments, commencing the 24th of June, 1659. and the 6 Months Assessment, commencing the 25th of Decemb. 1659.

5 'An Act for granting to the Kings Majesty 420000 l. by Assessment of 70000 l. by the Month for six Months, for disbanding of the Army, and paying off the Navy.

6 'An Act for the raising of 70000 l. for the further supply of his Majesty.

7 'An

7 ' An Act for Confirmation of Marriages.
8 ' An Act for raising and establishing a Post-Office.

9 ' An Act for the further supplying and explaining certain defects in an Act for the speedy provision of Money for disbanding and paying off the Forces of this Kingdom, both by Land and Sea.

10 ' An Act for the better ordering of the selling of Wine by Retail, and for preventing abuses in the mingling, corrupting and vitiating of Wines; and for settling and limiting the Prizes of the same.

11 ' An Act for prohibiting the planting, setting, or sowing of Tobacco in England and Ireland.

12 ' An Act for prohibiting the Exportation of Wooll, Wooll-fells, Fullers-Earth, or any kind of Scouring Earth.

The substance of the Act of Attainder.

' By the Act of Attainder, which was made to Attaint the Judges and other Actors in the Murther of the late King, Oliver Cromwell deceased, Henry Ireton deceased, John Bradshaw deceased, and Thomas Pride deceased, are Adjudged to be Convicted and Attainted of High Treason, to all intents and purposes, as if they and every of them respectively had been Attainted in their Life-time.

2 ' And all the Persons fled for Treason, at is to say, John Lisle, William Say, Valentine Wanton, Edward Whalley, John Barkstead, Edmond Ludlow, Sir Michael Livesey, John Okey, John Hewson, William Goffe, Cornelius Holland, Thomas Challoner, William Cawley, Miles Corbet, Nicholas Love, John Dixwell, Daniel Blagrove, Andrew Broughton, Edward Dendy, and every of them, stand, and be Adjudged, Convicted, and Attainted of High-Treason.

3 ' All the Mannours, Messuages, Lands, Tenements, Rents, Reversions, Remainders, Possessions, Rights, Conditions, Interests, Offices, Fees, Annuities, and all other Hereditaments, Leases for years, Chattels Real, and all other things of that nature whatsoever they be, of them the said Oliver Cromwell, Henry Ireton, John Bradshaw, Thomas Pride, and of other persons particularly named in the said Act, amounting in all to the number of two and fifty persons, which they or any of them, or any other person or persons to their or any of their uses, or in trust for them or any of them, the 25th day of March, 1646. or at any time since, shall stand and be forfeited to the King, his Heirs and Successors, and shall be vested and adjudged to be in the actual and real possession of the King, without any Office or Inquisition thereof hereafter to be taken or found.

4 ' No Conveyance, Assurance, Grant, Bargain, Sale, Charge, Lease, Assignment, Surrender by Copy, Estate, Interest, Trust, Limitation of Uses, or out of any Lands, Tenements or Hereditaments, (not being the Lands of the late King, Queen, Prince, or any of the Arch-Bishops, Bishops, Deans and Chapters,) nor any Statute, Judgment or Recognition had, made, acknowledged or suffered to any person or persons which before the 24th day of September, 1659. by any of the Offenders in the Act mentioned, or their Heirs, or any other persons claiming by, from, or under them, other than the Wife or Wives, Child or Children, Heir or Heirs, of such person or persons to any of them for Money bona fide, to them or any of them paid or Lent, nor any Conveyance, Grant, or Estate, made before the 25th day of April, 1660. by any person or persons aforesaid, in trust and for the benefit of any other person or persons not being of the Offenders aforesaid, shall be impeached, defeated, made void or frustrated hereby, or by the Convictions or Attainders aforesaid, but shall be enjoined by the Purchasers, Grantees, Lessees, their Heirs, Executors, Administrators and Assigns respectively, as if this Act had not been made; so as the said Conveyances, Grants, Assurances, which are and ought to be held and enjoyed, as aforesaid, before the first of January, 1662. be enter'd and enrolled of Record in the Exchequer, and not otherwise.

5 ' All and singular the Mannours, Lands and Hereditaments, which heretofore were the Lands, &c. of Henry late Marquess of Worcester, Edward now Marquess of Worcester, and Henry Lord Herbert, Son to the said Edward Marquess of Worcester, whereof the said Oliver Cromwell, or any other person in trust for him, or to his use, or any other the persons attainted by this Act, or otherwise, or any other person in trust for them, or any of them, had at any time before or since the decease of the said Oliver Cromwell, are vested and seized in, and shall be held and enjoyed by the said Marquess of Worcester, and Henry Lord Herbert, in such manner, and for such Estates, or such Powers and Priviledges, as they formerly had in the same, saving the Estates, Rights, Titles and Interests of Strangers, not derived by and from any of the said Offenders since the 25th day of March, 1646.

1 ' It is provided nevertheless, That those who have received any of the Rents or Mean Profits of, in, or out of any the Lands, Chattels Real, or possessions of any of the Offenders in this Act mentioned before the 11th of February, 1659. and have paid or accompted for the same before that day unto the said Offender or Offenders, or their Assigns, or any other person claiming from or under them, shall be for ever acquitted and discharged of and from the same, against the King, his Heirs and Successors.

2. And also, That Richard Ingoldsby may keep, sell or dispose of all the Goods and Chattels formerly belonging to Sir Hardress Waller in Ireland, until 2000 l. (for which the said Ingoldsby in the year 1658. stood joyntly bounden with the said Sir Hardress Waller unto James Brooks of the City of York Alderman, and was then Counter-secured by a Judgment upon his Lands, and since by a Deed of Bargain and Sale of the said Goods and Chattels in Ireland,) be fully paid, together with the Interest thereof; the said Ingoldsby paying the Over-plus to the King.

The Kings Favour to this Gentleman, grounded upon so notable a Foundation of Merit, as is before related, did oblige the Parliament in this and many other occasions, to shew their respect to him.

The

1660.

1660.

The Act for raising and establishing a Post-Office, brought a Revenue of one and twenty thousand pounds a year to the Crown; which was an Improvement first made in the time of Cromwell's Usurpation.

The Act for the better ordering of the selling of Wines by Retail, was to prohibit any from selling of Wines, but such as should be licens'd by the Kings Agents; and from retailing mingled, corrupted, or abused Wines: as also for limiting and bringing down the prices thereof.

The Act for the prohibiting the planting, setting or sowing of Tobacco in England and Ireland, did under strict penalties forbid the setting or planting any Tobacco in seed, plant, or otherwise, in England, Wales, the Island of Jersey and Guernsey, and the Town of Berwick, except it be in any Physick-Garden of either of the Universities, or other private Garden for Physick or Surgery, so as the quantity so planted, exceed not one half of a Pole in any place or Garden.

The Act for prohibiting the Exportation of Wooll, Wooll-fells, Fullers-Earth, or any kind of scouring Earth, was made to preserve the Manufacture of Woollen-cloth in England, which was one of the Staple-commodities of this Kingdom, and that which brought most Trade and advantage of any to it, till of late years that the Hollander, French, and others of our Neighbours, by Exportation of our Materials, had almost gain'd all the Trade thereof from us: And although these materials, as Wooll, Wooll-fells, and Fullers-Earth, had been by former Laws prohibited to be Exported to any Forreign parts, on pain of forfeiture, or other pecuniary Mulcts, those Laws could not prevent the offences, for they were frequently by stealth or connivance exported. Wherefore this Statute was thought fit to be made, for the re-inforcing of those former Laws, and preventing the like abuses for the future.

The Effect of his Majesties and the Lord Chancellours Speech, at the Dissolving of his Parliament.

After the King had given the Royal Assent to the before-mentioned Acts, he made a Speech to both Houses, full of gracious and pleasing Expressions: and amongst others, he said, This Parliament should be called to all Posterity, The Healing and the Blessed Parliament. And that it should be a Rule to his Actions and Councils to consider, What is a Parliament like to think of this Action, or this Council? Adding, That he would Religiously himself observe the Act of Indemnity, and would exact the Observation of it from all others.

And after he had ended, the Lord Chancellor (according to the Custom, for none ever in his Place had greater Eloquence) excellently set forth the Happiness of the King and his People, which only strove which should express more affection to each others, to the joy of all his good Subjects, and the terror of Evil Doers. And with this Speech he concluded the Parliament; for then it was dissolved. And we may truly say, never did King and Parliament in this Kingdom better agree; never was there any Parliament Assembled with greater Expectation, and ended with greater Satisfaction to all the People; of which we may not improperly insert in this place a Stanza, out of that Excellent Ode upon the Kings Restauration and Return, made by the most Celebrated of our English Poets, Mr. Abraham Cowley, now living, a little before its Dissolution; in the 18th Page whereof is sung this passage,

*And ill should We deserve this Happy Day,
If no acknowledgment we pay
To You Great Patriots of the Two Most truly other Houses now;
Who have redeem'd from Hatred and from Shame,
A Parliament's once Venerable Name;
And now the Title of a House restore
To that which was but Slaughter-House before:
If my advice, Ye Worthies, might be tane,
Within those Reverend Places
Which now your Living Presence graces,
Your Worthy Statues always should remain,
To keep alive your useful Memory,
And to your Successors th' Example be Of Truth, Religion, Reason, Loyalty.
For though a firmly settled Peace,
May shortly make your Publick Labours cease,
The grateful Nation will with joy consent,
That in this Sence, you should be said
(Though yet the Name sounds with some dread)
To be the Long, the Endless Parliament.*

Of all the manifold Sects and Separations that sprung up from the licence of the late War, and the Anarchy that reign'd from that time, till the time of his Majesties Restauration, there were scarce any that dreaded not the Name of Monarchy, as apprehending the consequence thereof to be a tendency to Uniformity in Church and State; and therefore no marvel if they who heretofore were profess'd Enemies to the King and his Right of Government, were after his coming in agitated with a restless spirit of impatience and dissatisfaction, which forbore not several times to manifest it self in such Attempts, as had not a timely stop been put unto them, by the prudent foresight and vigilant care of his Majesty and his Council, might very much have endanger'd the imbroiling of the Nation in a new Civil War. The first Alarm that was given, was by the Fifth-Monarchy-men, (they at least were the only hardy men that openly appear'd) a Generation of people however so call'd, the most inveterate Enemies to the Ancient settled Monarchy of the Nation, of all the whole Hydra; of these about 50 or 60 mad persons, resolving to venture Neck or nothing, broke forth into open Hostility and Rebellion, under the Conduct of one Thomas Venner, a Cooper, that had lived for some time in New-England, and was of the principal of the Fifth-Monarchy, and a Preacher to a Conventicle of those of that Opinion, who usually met in Coleman-street. That which first gave him and his Partakers a pretence to their Treason, was the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy, (which all good Subjects are oblig'd by the Law to take) exclaiming not only against them in particular, but against all Oaths in general: And when some amongst them, more Ingenious than the rest, advised their Companions not to dispute what was commanded by their Superiours, since subjection was naturally due to those Powers from whence they expected Protection; they were answered by the Seditious, That they had no Protection in the exercise of their Religion, but were for the practice thereof exposed to all manner of Contempts and Miseries. As if a Just Restraint from Extravagancies in Divine Worship, were to be esteem'd Oppression.

The

The madness of these Men extended so far, as to believe they and the rest of their Judgment were called by GOD. to Reform the World, and make all the Earthly Powers (which they called Babylon) subservient to the Kingdom of King Jesus; and in order thereunto, never to sheath their Sword till the Carnal Powers of the World became a hissing and a Curse: And by a misguided Zeal, they were so confident in their undertaking, that they were taught and believ'd one should subdue a Thousand, making account when they had led captive Captivity in England, to go into France, Spain, Germany, and other parts of the World, there to prosecute their holy design.

The place where they consulted and continued their Conspiracy, was the Meeting-place for their Devotion, and thither they had at several times conveyed Arms. On Sunday the Sixth of January, which was the day before their Excursion, (his Majesty at that time being gone to accompany his Royal Mother the Queen-Dowager of Great-Britain, and his Sister the Princess Henrietta Maria, part of their Journey toward France;) they were very late at their Assembly, which made one Martin, the Landlord of the House, but not of their Party, somewhat inquisitive after their doings; and as he was going into the Chamber to them, he met Venner, who seeing him troubled, told him, He perceiv'd he thought their stay too long, and that in half an hours space after they had sought God in their Prayers, they would disperse; Martin's jealousy of their actions, made him Consult with a Friend about their unusual manner of Assembling, and he was advised to Listen at their Door, or peep through some Chink to hear or see what they were about, which he did, and found them Arming themselves with Back, Breast and Head-Piece; and thereupon he immediately gave Notice thereof to some of the next Officers: But within half an hour of this, they came down, and being met by the Mistress of the House great with Child, who in amazement would have shut the Door upon them, they offer'd to shoot her with a Musquet; upon which in great terror she left them. The Rebels first march'd to St. Thomas Apostles, to call some of their party, and from thence to Bishopsgate, and after to White-Cross-Street. Sir Richard Brown, the Lord Major, having notice of their being abroad, got together some Files of the Trained Bands, but not sufficient, as was supposed, to make any impression upon them, they being imagin'd more numerous than they were, by which means they had opportunity to escape to St. Johns Wood, and from thence to Cane-Wood, betwixt High-Gate and Hampstead.

By this time the Alarm being come to White-Hall, and the General's Regiment drawn up, the Duke of York and he, with the Earl of Oxford, and some others, and some of the Guards, march'd into London, where they were informed all the Rebels were dispersed, except a party of them that were seen to go towards Cane-wood, whither Sir Thomas Sandys was sent with some of the Guards, and a Company of Foot: But by the darkness of the Night they got away, and on Wednesday morning came again into London, and divided themselves into two Parties, one whereof about 5 and 6 in the morning appear'd about Leaden-Hall, and from thence march'd to Little-Eastcheap, where they fought obstinately enough, but were dispersed by the Train'd-Bands. Venner and another Party came to my Lord Major's House, thinking to have taken him Prisoner; but missing him, they march'd into Wood-street, where they were met by Colonel Corbet, and about twenty Horse. Corbet and nine of his party charged through the Rebels, and broke them, whereby the Train'd-Band Foot that seconded them; had little more to do, than to pursue them. They fought with courage to admiration; and if they had not been hindered by the care of the Lord Major from increasing their numbers, a Thousand men so resolv'd, might have caused such a disturbance in the City, as might have had an influence much further. Venner himself was very much wounded before he was taken, and about five or six kill'd that refused quarter, of which some of them were so obscure, that their Names were not known. And about eight or ten days after, Venner with about sixteen or seventeen of the most notorious, were arraigned at Justice-Hall in the Old-Baily, found guilty, and executed in several parts of London.

Thus ended this desperate Enterprize of a formidable Army of threescore men, who were insensated to that height of Enthusiastick Valour, that they thought themselves strong enough to encounter the whole Armed force of one of the Greatest and most Populous Cities in the World; The Princes Guards, the General's Troops, the City Train'd-Bands, were all swallow'd up in Conceit, by these men of Mickle Might, and Little Wit; and I have heard say, they were so Infatuated with their golden Dreams, and so Cock-sure of success, that they had promis'd to themselves the Partage of the whole Empire of the World among them; Thirty being design'd for the subduing of the Eastern Parts; and thirty of the Western: But we have seen what disaster they met with by the Way.

With the Suppressing of this Insurrection, and the bringing the Authors thereof to exemplary punishment, together with the decease of Sir Arthur Haslerigg in the Tower, who is thought to have died with very Anguish of Mind, to see all his great designs in an Instant brought to nothing, and himself at the Mercy of a Power o're which he had so long Triumph'd; We shall conclude this Year, as with the Solemn Coronation of his Majesty; our present History not thinking it enough to have seen him restor'd to his Throne and rightful Inheritance, without seeing him also invested with those Ensigns, and Formalities of Regal Dignity, by which all his Predecessors were confirm'd and establish'd Kings of England.

The Poms and Proceedings whereof, in regard they may very well be conceiv'd to have exceeded the Magnificences of all former Coronations, as being perform'd for a PRINCE so miraculously restor'd to his People, We judg not impertinent to be here Inserted; following herein the Observations and Collection (according to the Original unmutated Copy set forth by himself, and with his own Name prefix'd to the Title) of Elias Ashmole Esq; Windsor Herald at Arms; a most Judicious and Curious Inquirer into all Antiquities of this Nature, and exactly vers'd

Which Knights of the Bath, were first dubbed Knights-Bachelors, were Knighted by the King with the Sword of State, and then every one of them was adorned with the Red-Ribbond of Knight-hood of the Bath, with a Medal adjoyn- ing unto it of Three Crowns, with an Inscription about it of Tria juncta in uno; which words till King James's Coronation, were Tria numina juncta in uno, from The Holy Trinity, but at that time the word Numina was left out which is supposed to be, that from that time it might be lookt on to be an order of Knight-hood in allusion unto the union of the Three Kingdoms of England

* Son of that Sir Robert Ducey, who in the dangerous times of difficulty and trial, chose rather to contract the Envy of his Brethren, than to recede from those Principles of Allegiance which inspir'd him to adjudg God and Caesar their Due.

England, Scotland and Ireland, as Tria Regna juncta in uno.

The Commissioners appointed for the calling together of these persons to be Knighted, were the Duke of Ormond, the Earls of Northumberland, Suffolk, Lindsey and Manchester.

The Twelve Persons Advanc'd unto the Titles of Earls and Barons, were Edward Baron Hyde of Hindon, Lord High-Chancellor of England, created Earl of Clarendon. Arthur Baron Capell, created Earl of Essex. Thomas Baron Brudenell, Earl of Cardigan. Arthur Viscount Valentia, Earl of Anglesey. Sir John Greenville Knight, Gentleman of his Majesty's Bed-Chamber, Earl of Bath. Charles Howard, Earl of Carlisle. Denzell Holles Esquire, Barron Holles of Ifeld. Sir Frederick Cornwallis Knight and Baronet, Baron Cornwallis of Eye in Suffolk. Sir George Booth Baronet, Baron de la Mere of Dunham Massey. Sir Horatio Townsend Baronet, Baron Townsend of Lyn-Regis. Sir Anthony Ashley-Cooper Baronet, Baron Ashly of Winton St. Giles. John Crew Esq; Baron Crew of Stone. Who were so created Earls and Barons on Saturday in the Afternoon, the 20 of April, 1661. in the Banqueting-Room in White-Hall, three days before the King's Coronation.

On Monday the 22d of April, his Majesty, according to the Ancient Custom, made his Cavalcade from the Tower to Westminster, in such a glorious and splendid manner, that it seem'd to out-vie whatever had been seen before of Gallantry and Riches, the gorgeousness of Apparel, the sparkling of Gems, the lustre of Gold, in a continued Train so dazzling the Spectator's sight, as if both the Indies had been summon'd over to attend at that Day's Triumph; In preparation to which, Four very Stately and Magnificent Triumphal Arches had been Erected by the City (according as their Charter obligeth them upon such an occasion) for his Majesty to pass through to his Coronation.

The first in Leaden-Hall-Street, near Lime-street end, made after the Dorick Order, representing his Majesty's happy Arrival in England.

The second, being a Naval Representation, was near the Exchange in Cornhill.

The third, consisting of the Corinthian and Composite Order, and representing the Temple of Concord, was plac'd in Cheapside, near Wood-street End.

The fourth, consisting of the Dorick and Ionick Orders, and representing the Garden of Plenty, stood in Fleet-street, near White-Friars.

All Four of them being describ'd at large in a Treatise particularly set forth to that purpose by Mr. John Ogilby.

The Proceeding of his Majesty from the Tower to Westminster, was in the following Order:

The

1661.

The Proceedings on the day of his MAJESTIES Coronation, were as followeth.

UPon Tuesday the 23d of April, being St. George's day, about half an hour after seven in the Morning, the King entred into his Rich Barge, took Water from the Privy-Stairs at White Hall, and Landed at the Parliament-Stairs: From whence he proceeded up to the Room behind the Lords House, called the Princes Lodgings, where after he had reposed himself for a while, he was arrayed in his Royal Robes of Crimson-Velvet, furr'd with Ermine: By which time the Nobility being assembled, robed themselves in the Lords House, and Painted-Chamber.

The Judges also, with those of the Long-Robe, the Knights of the Bath, and Gentlemen of the Privy-Chamber, met in the Court of Requests.

After some space, the Kings Heralds, and Pursuivants, began to set the Proceeding in order, each of them taking his share assigned in Chapter, (held at the Heralds-Office the Evening before) and thence directed all the before-mentioned Degrees (except the Nobility) down into Westminster-Hall, where the rest of the Proceeding attended, and from whence the March began.

About half an hour after Nine, the Nobility (having been first called over in the Painted-Chamber) proceeded each according to his Rank and Dignity, in their Robes and Coronets, before the King, through the Court of Requests, into Westminster-Hall, ascended up to the State, which was raised at the West-end, and placed themselves upon each side thereof.

His Majesty being set in his Chair, under a rich Cloth of State: First, Sir Gilbert Talbot, the Master of the Jewel House, presented the Sword of State, as also the Sword called Curtana, and two other Swords to the Lord High-Constable, who took and delivered them to the Lord High-Chamberlain, and he (having drawn the last) laid them upon the Table before the King.

Then the said Master of the Jewel-House delivered likewise the Spurs to the Lord High-Constable; and he again the same to the Lord High-Chamberlain, who also placed them upon the Table.

Immediately after the Dean and Prebends of Westminster, (by whom the Regalia had been brought in Procession from the Abbey-Church unto Westminster-Hall) being vested in rich Copes, proceeded from the lower end thereof, in manner following:

The Serjeant of the Vestry in a Scarlet Mantle.
The Children of the Kings Chappel, being twelve in number, in Scarlet Mantles.
The Quire of Westminster in Surplices.
The Gentlemen of the Kings Chappel, being thirty three in number, in Scarlet Mantles.
The Pursuivants, Heralds, and Provincial Kings.
The Dean, carrying St. Edward's Crown.
Doctor Helyn, the Scepter with the Cross.
Doctor Heywood, the Scepter with the Dove.
Doctor Nicholas, the Orb with the Cross.
Doctor Killegrew, King Edward's Staff.
Doctor Jones, the Chalice, and Patena.
Doctor Dowty, the Spoon.
Doctor Busby, the Ampulla.

All standing towards the lower end of the Hall, ready to proceed, they made their first Reverence together; then coming to the middle of the said Hall, they made there a second; and thence going a little further, both the Quires fell off, and stood on either side, through which Lane, the Pursuivants, Heralds, and Kings passing, fell likewise off on either side, the Seniors still placing themselves uppermost towards the Throne: after whom the Dean and Prebends proceeded, and arrived at the foot of the Stone-steps, ascending to the Throne, where they made another Reverence.

This being done, the Dean and Prebends, with Garter, Principal King of Arms before them, (he having waited their coming thither) ascended the Steps, and approaching near to the Table before the King, made their last Reverence.

The Dean first presented the Crown, which was by the Lord High-Constable, and Lord Great-Chamberlain, set upon the Table; who afterwards took from each of the Prebends that part of the Regalia, which they carried, and laid them also by the Crown: which done, they retired.

Then the Lord Great-Chamberlain presenting the Regalia severally to the King, his Majesty thereupon disposed of them unto the Noble-men hereafter-named, to be carried by them in the Proceeding to the Abbey-Church, viz.

St. Edward's Staff to the Earl of Sandwich.

The Spurs to the Earl of Pembroke and Montgomery.

The Scepter with the Cross to the Earl of Bedford.

The Pointed-Sword (born on the left hand of Curtana) to the Earl of Derby.

The Pointed-Sword (born on the right hand thereof) to the Earl of Shrewsbury.

The Sword called Curtana to the Earl of Oxford.

The Sword of State to the Earl of Manchester.

The Scepter with the Dove to the Duke of Albemarle.

The Orb with the Cross to the Duke of Buckingham.

St. Edward's Crown to the Duke of Ormond.

The Patena to the Bishop of Exeter: And lastly,

The Chalice to the Bishop of London.

And because the Spoon and Ampulla were not to be born in the Proceeding, and therefore ought not to have been brought thither, but placed upon the High-Altar in the Abbey-Church, there to lye in readines; they were not presented to the King, but commanded to be sent back thither, and laid thereon.

All things being thus prepared, and it being about ten a clock, the Proceeding began from out the said Hall into the Palace-Yard, through the Gate-House, and the end of King's street, thence along the Great Sanctuary, and so to the West-end of the Abbey-Church, all upon blew Cloth, which was spread upon the ground, from the Throne in Westminster-Hall, to the great Steps in the Abbey-Church, by Sir George Carteret Knight, Vice-Chamberlain, appointed by the King to be his Almoner for this Day.

disposed by the Heralds into two Galleries, built on either side the upper end of the Quire.

That on the North-side received the Aldermen of London, the Judges, and Gentlemen of the Long-Robe, the Quire of Westminster, the Gentlemen and Children of the Kings Chappel, (excepting twelve Gentlemen, four Children, and one Organist, who went into a Gallery, raised on the South-side of the upper Quire, peculiarly appointed for them:) and in the Gallery on the South-side, were seated the Knights of the Bath, and Gentlemen of the Privy-Chamber.

The King being entred the West-Door of the Abbey-Church, was received with an Anthem, begun by the Quire of Westminster; who, with the Dean, and Prebends, had before fallen off from the Proceeding, a little on the left hand of the middle Isle, and stayed there to attend his coming, where also a Fald-stool, and Cushions were laid ready for his Majesty to kneel at.

The Anthem sung, was the first, fourth, fifth, and sixth Verses of the 122 Psalm:

I was glad when they said unto me, We will go into the House of the Lord, &c.

The King arriving at the Fald-stool, kneeled down, and used some private Ejaculations, which being finished, he thence proceeded into, and through the Quire, up to the great Theatre (erected close to the four high Pillars, standing between the Quire and the Altar) upon which the Throne of Estate was placed, (being a Square raised on five Degrees) at the Entrance whereof were set a Chair, Foot-stool, and Cushion, covered with Cloth of Gold, whereon he reposed himself.

Immediately after the Bishop of London (who was appointed to Officiate, in part, that day; for the Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, whose Age and Weakness rendred him incapable of performing his whole Duty at the Coronation) having the Lord High-Constable, the Earl-Marshal, the Lord Great Chamberlain, the Lord High Chancellor, and Lord Chamberlain of the Household before him, went first to the South, next to the West, and lastly, to the North-side of the Theatre; and at every of the said three sides, acquainted the People, that he presented to them King CHARLES, the Rightful Inheritour of the Crown of this Realm; and asked them, if they were willing to do their Homage, Service, and Bounden Duty to Him.

As this was doing, the King rose up, and stood by the aforesaid Chair, turning his Face still to that side of the Stage where the said Bishop stood, when he spake to the People; who signified their willingness, by loud Shouts and Acclamations.

The same Question was likewise put by the said Bishop to all the Nobility present.

Immediately after, this following Anthem was sung by the Gentlemen of the Kings Chappel:

Let thy Hand be strengthened, and thy right Hand be exalted. Let Justice and Judgment be the Preparation of thy Seat, and Mercy and Truth go before thy Face.

In which time, a large Carpet was spread by a Groom, and Page of the removing Wardrobe, from the Altar, down below the half-Paces thereof, and over that a Silk-Carpet, and Cushion laid by the Gentleman-Usher of the Black-Rod, and Mr. Kimmersley: Whereupon the Bishop of London went down from the Stage towards the Altar; and having made his Reverence, placed himself at the North-side thereof.

Then the King descended from his Throne, and proceeded towards the Altar, being supported by the Bishops of Duresme, and Bath, and Wells, with the four Swords, the grand Officers, the Noble-men and Bishops, that carried the Regalia before him, the Dean of Westminster also attending. Being arrived at the steps of the Altar, he kneeled down upon the Cushion, there laid ready for him, having first offered the Pall, (which was of Cloth of Gold, and born by the Earl of Sandwich) as also a Wedge of Gold of a pound weight (presented unto his hands by the Lord Cornwallis, Treasurer of his Household) both which were received from the King by the Bishop of London, who laid them reverently upon the Altar. Immediately after, his Majesty retired to a Chair of State, set on the South-side of the Altar, a little below the Traverse of Crimfon Taffety.

After this, the Bishops and Noble-men that carried the Regalia, drew near to the Altar, and presented every particular to the said Bishop of London, who placed them also upon the Altar; and having so done, they retired to their Seats. Whereupon the King kneeled at a Fald-stool (set on the right side of his Chair of State, whilst the Bishop of London said this Prayer,

O God, which dost visit those that are humble, and dost comfort us by thy Holy Spirit, send down thy Grace upon this thy Servant CHARLES, that by Him we may feel thy Presence among us, through Jesus Christ, Amen.

This Prayer ended, the Bishop of Worcester went up into the Pulpit, placed on the North-side of the Altar, opposite to the King, and began his SERMON, the Text being taken out of the 28th Chapter of the Proverbs, and the second Verse.

From the beginning of the aforesaid Offering to this time, the KING was bare; but now he put on his Cap, made of Crimfon Velvet, turn'd up with Ermines; with which he fate covered all the Sermon-time.

On the Kings right hand stood the Bishop of Duresme, and beyond him the Noble-men, that carried the Swords, who held them naked, and erect. The Duke of York fate a little behind him on his left hand; next to whom stood the Bishop of Bath and Wells, together with the Lord Great Chamberlain.

The Lord High Chancellor, and Lord High Treasurer, fate on a Form behind the Duke of York; and behind them, in a Gallery, fate the Dutchess of York.

In the same Gallery also were placed Baron Bateville, Ordinary Ambassadour from Spain.

Prince Maurice of Nassau, Extraordinary Ambassadour from the Elector of Brandenburg.

Monsieur Weyman, the Electors Chancellor, who was joyned in Commission with him.

The Count Coningsmark, Envoy from Sweden.

Monsieur Eriesendorf, Resident of Sweden.

Monsieur

Monsieur Petcom, Resident of Denmark.
Monsieur Plessis Belleure, Envoy from Monsieur the Duke of Orleans.

Signieur Giavarina, Resident of Venice.

Signieur Bernardi, Resident of Genoa.

Monsieur La-Motte, and Monsieur Frays, Envoys from the Prince Elector.

Monsieur Gormers, Deputy-Extraordinary from Hamburgh.

An Envoy from the Cardinal of Hefs.

The Marquess de Montbrun, with several other Gentlemen-strangers.

But Don Francisco de Mello, the Ambassador of Portugal, was placed in the Lord Chamberlains Box.

On the North-side of the Altar sat the Bishop of London, directly opposite to the King in the Arch-Bishops Chair, covered with Purple-Velvet; the rest of the Bishops were placed on Forms behind him.

And higher, towards St. Edward's Chappel stood Garter, Principal King of Arms, with the Officers of the standing and moving Ward-robe, viz. Mr. Rumbal, and Mr. Townesend, and Mr. Kinnersley, in Scarlet-Gowns, having a Crown embroidered with Gold on their left sleeves, the Groom and Page of the Ward-robe having Scarlet-Gowns also, but not the badg of the Crown; the Serjeant of the Vestry with his gilt Verge, and other Vergers: with them also stood Mr. Ashburnham, Mr. Seymour, Mr. Elliot, Mr. Progers, and Mr. Chiffinch, with some other of the Kings Servants, who attended to do Service.

Opposite to them, on the South-side of the Altar, stood the Dean and Prebends of Westminster.

St. Edward's Ancient Chair, (covered all over with Cloth of Gold) was placed upon the North-side of the Altar, a little lower than that belonging to the Arch-Bishop, but something nearer the middle of the Isle, and between the Kings Chair of State and the Pulpit.

Near the Pulpit stood the Master of the Jewel-House, and the Lord Mayor of London.

The Nobility, not formerly named, (who were seated upon Forms round about the inside of the Stage) when Sermon began, drew near to that side thereof which faced the High Altar, and stood there.

On the Corners of the Stage, near the High Altar, adjoining to the two uppermost Pillars, were places railed in for the Provincial Kings, Heralds, and Pursuivants.

The Serjeants at Arms, being sixteen in number, stood with their Maces on their Shoulders within the Rails, on either side the Entrance of the Stage from the Quire.

Over the Door, and at the West-end of the Quire, stood the Drums and Trumpets.

Sermon being ended, the King uncovered his Head, and immediately the Bishop of London arose from his Seat, and drew near to the Kings Chair of State, and asked him his willingness to take the usual Oath to confirm the Laws to the People, and namely the Franchises granted to the Clergy by St. Edward the Confessor, to maintain the Gospel established in the Kingdom, to keep Peace, execute Justice, and grant the Commons the rightful Customs: unto every of which Questions his Majesty made particular Answers, That He would.

Then the Bishop of Rochester read the Bishop's Petition to the King; the Prayer whereof was, That he would preserve unto them, and the Churches committed to their Charge, all Canonical Priviledges, due Law, and Justice, and protect and defend them, and the Churches under their Government: Which his Majesty most graciously by a large Answer (which repeated the words of the Petition) granted, and promised to perform.

Afterwards the King, assisted by the Bishops of Duresme, and Bath and Wells, was led from his Chair up to the Altar (the Sword of State being born before him, and the Lord Great Chamberlain attending) where he took an Oath to perform, and keep what he had promised.

Which Oath taken, the King was led in like manner back to his Chair of State, and immediately the Bishop of London begun the Hymn, Come Holy Ghost, Eternal God, &c. the Quires singing the rest of it.

And a little before the ending thereof, the Fald-stool was set again at the Kings right hand, whereat (as soon as the Hymn was finished) he kneeled, the Bishop of London standing before him, and saying the following Prayer:

We beseech thee, O Lord, Holy Father, Almighty and Everlasting God, for this thy Servant Charles, &c.

The Prayer ended, the Bishop of London went to the North-side of the Altar, the King still kneeling, and forthwith the Bishops of Peterborough, and Gloucester, went and kneeled on the upper hault-pace of the Altar, where they began the Letany, the Quires singing the Responses; the Dean of Westminster kneeling all the while at the Kings left hand.

After the Letany followed three Prayers, said by the Bishop of London at the North-side of the Altar: and a little before the last of them was ended, the Arch-Bishop of Canterbury came out at the North-door of St. Edward's Chappel, vested in a rich antient Cope.

At the ending of the third Prayer, the said Arch-Bishop standing before the Altar, began the Versicle:

Lift up your Hearts.

Resp.

We lift them up to the Lord.

Arch-Bishop.

Let us give thanks unto the Lord our God.

Resp.

It is meet and right so to do.

Arch-Bishop.

It is very meet, and right, and our bounden duty, that we should at all times, and in all places, give thanks unto thee, O Lord, Holy Father, &c.

This Preface being finished, the King arose from before the Fald-stool, and went to the Altar, supported by the afore said Bishops of Duresme, and Bath and Wells; where he was disrobed by the Lord Great Chamberlain of his Royal Robes, which were immediately carried thence into the Traverse erected in St. Edward's Chappel.

Whilest this was in doing, the Chair that was before placed at the entrance of the Stage, was 1661. was removed, and set on the North-side of the Altar, betwixt it and St. Edward's Chair, whereunto the King came, fate down, and was anointed by the said Arch-Bishop, (while the Dean of Westminster held the Ampulla, and poured the Oyl out into the Spoon) first in the Palms of both his hands, in manner of a Cross, the Arch-Bishop as he anointed him, pronouncing these words:

Let these Hands be anointed with Holy Oyl, as Kings and Prophets have been anointed, and as Samuel did anoint David to be King, that Thou mayst be blessed, and established KING in this Kingdom, and this People, whom the Lord thy God hath given Thee to rule over: which he vouchsafe to grant; who, with the Father, and the Holy Ghost, Three in Person, and One in Unity, be blessed, and praised, now, and for evermore. Amen.

After which the Quire sung this Anthem,

Sadoc the Priest, and Nathan the Prophet anointed Solomon King, and all the People rejoiced, and said, God save the KING.

At the end of which Anthem, the Arch-Bishop said this Prayer:

Look down, Almighty God, with thy favourable Countenance upon this Glorious KING, &c.

And then proceeded with his anointing the Kings Breast, between his Shoulders, on both his Shoulders, the two bowings of his Arms, and on the Crown of his Head, in manner aforesaid.

Which being done, the Anointing was dried up with fine Linnen, and the Loops of his Shirt closed up by the Dean of Westminster, and then the Arch-Bishop said these two Prayers:

God, the Son of God, Christ Jesus our Lord, who is anointed of his Father with the Oyl of Gladness above his fellows, &c. God, which art the Glory of the Righteous, and the Mercy of Sinners, &c.

During the time of Unction, a rich Pall of Cloth of Gold, (brought from the great Wardrobe by Mr. Rumball) was held over the Kings Head by the Dukes of Buckingham and Albemarle, the Earls of Berks and Sandwich, as Knights of the most Noble Order of the Garter.

After these Prayers, the Lord Great Chamberlain delivered the Coif to the Arch-Bishop, who put it on the Kings Head, and immediately after the Dean of Westminster put the Coif, with the Colobium Sindonis, or Surplice, upon the King: whereupon the Arch-Bishop said this short Prayer;

O God, the King of Kings, and Lord of Lords, by whom Kings do Reign, and Law-givers do make good Laws, vouchsafe, we beseech thee, in thy favour, to bless this Kingly Ornament, and grant that thy Servant Charles, our King, who shall wear it, may shine in thy sight with the Ornament of a good Life, and holy Actions; and after this life ended, He may for ever enjoy that Life and Glory which hath no end, through Christ our Lord. Amen.

This said, the Dean of Westminster having likewise fetched the Tissue-Hose and Sandals from the Altar, he arrayed the King therewith; as also with the Super-tunica, or close Pall of Cloth of Gold, and girded the same about him.

But the Taffety red Shirt was not made use of at all.

After all this, the said Dean took the Spurs from off the Altar, and delivered them to the Lord Great Chamberlain, who touched the Kings Heels therewith, and forthwith sent them back to the Altar.

Then the Arch-Bishop received the Sword of State in the Scabbard from the Lord Chamberlain of the Household, and laid it upon the Altar, saying this Prayer:

Hear our Prayers, we beseech thee, O Lord, and vouchsafe by thy right hand of Majesty, to bless and sanctifie this Sword, wherewith thy Servant Charles desireth to be girt, that it may be a Defence and Protection of Churches, Widows and Orphans, and all the Servants of God, against the savage cruelty of Pagans, and Infidels; and that it may be a Fear and Terrour to all those that lie in wait to do mischief, through Christ our Lord. Amen.

This Prayer finished, the Arch-Bishop and Bishops assisting, delivered the Sword back to the King, saying, Accipe gladium per manus Episcoporum. Whereupon the Lord Great Chamberlain girt it about the King, and the Arch-Bishop said, Receive this Kingly Sword, which is hallowed for the defence of the Holy Church, and delivered unto Thee by the hands of the Bishops, though unworthy, yet Consecrated by the Authority of the Holy Apostles, &c.

After this, the Dean of Westminster took the * Armil, made of Cloth of Tissue, (brought thither by Mr. Rumball, on the behalf of the Earl of Sandwich, Master of the great Wardrobe) and put it about the Kings Neck, and tyed it to the bowings of his Arms, the Arch-Bishop standing before the King, with the Bishop of London on his right hand, and saying,

Receive the Armil of Sincerity and Wisdom, as a Token of Gods imbracing, whereby all thy works may be defended against thine Enemies, both Bodily and Ghostly, through Christ our Lord.

Next the Mantle or open Pall, being made of Cloth of Gold, and lined with red Taffety, was put upon him by the said Dean; the Arch-Bishop likewise using the words of signification, viz.

Receive this Pall, which is formed with four Corners, to let thee understand, that the four Corners of the World are subject to the Power of God; and that no man can happily reign upon the Earth, who hath not received his authority from Heaven.

In the next place, the Arch-Bishop took Saint Edward's Crown, and blessed it, saying, God, the Crown of the Faithful, &c. bless and sanctifie this Crown, that as the same is adorned with divers precious Stones, so this thy Servant that weareth it, may be filled with thy manifold Graces of all precious Vertues, through the King Eternal, thy Son our Lord. Amen.

In

In the mean time, St. Edward's Chair was removed into the middle of the Isle, and set right over-against the Altar, whither the King went and sate down in it, and then the Arch-Bishop brought St. Edward's Crown from the Altar, and put it upon his Head.

Whereupon, all the People, with loud and repeated shouts, cryed, God save the KING; and by a Signal then given, the great Ordinance from the Tower were also shot off.

At the ceasing of these Acclamations, the Arch-Bishop went on, saying,

God crown thee with a Crown of Glory, and Righteousness, with the honour and work of Fortitude, that thou by thy Ministry, having a Right Faith and manifold fruit of good Works, mayest obtain the Crown of an everlasting Kingdom, by the gift of him, whose Kingdom endureth for ever. Amen.

Adding thereunto this Prayer,

O God of Eternity, &c. Bless this thy Servant who boweth his Head unto thy Majesty, &c.

† At which words the King bowed His Head.

After the Prayer, the Arch-Bishop read the Confortare.

Be strong, and of a good courage, and observe the Commandments of the Lord, to walk in his ways, &c.

In the mean while, the Quires sung this Anthem.

The King shall rejoyce in thy strength, O Lord. Exceeding glad shall he be of thy Salvation, &c.

Upon this, the Dukes, Marquesses, Earls, and Viscounts put on their Coronets; the Barons their Caps: and divers of them came and stood about the KING, who still sate in St. Edward's Chair.

Mr. Garter and the Provincial Kings put on their Crowns also.

Then the Master of the Jewel-House delivered to the Arch-Bishop the Ring, who Consecrated it after this manner, saying,

Bless, O Lord, and sanctifie this Ring, that thy Servant, wearing it, may be sealed with the Ring of Faith, and by the Power of the Highest be preserved from Sin, and let all the Blessings, which are found in Holy Scripture, plentifully descend upon him, that whatsoever he shall sanctifie, may be holy; and whatsoever he blesseth, may be blessed. Amen.

After which, he put it upon the Fourth Finger of the Kings right Hand, and said,

Receive this Ring of Kingly Dignity, and by it the Seal of Catholick Faith, that as this Day thou art adorned the Head and Prince of this Kingdom, and People, so thou mayest preserve as the Author, and Establisher of Christianity, and the Christian Faith; that, being rich in Faith, and happy in Works, Thou mayest Reign with Him, that is King of Kings; to whom be Honour and Glory, for ever and ever. Amen.

And then began this Prayer,

O God, to whom belongeth all Power, and Dignity, give unto thy Servant Charles the Fruit of his Dignity; wherein grant He may long continue, and fear Thee always, and always labour to please Thee, through Christ our Lord. Amen.

When this Prayer was finished, the Linen-Gloves were delivered to the KING by the Lord Great-Chamberlain: who, going to the Altar, ungirt his Sword, and offered it at the Altar in the Scabbard; which being redeemed by the Lord Chamberlain of the Household, was drawn out of the Scabbard, and carried naked by him all the following part of the Solemnity.

Then the Arch-Bishop took the Scepter, with the Crofs, from off the Altar, and delivered it into the Kings right Hand, saying,

Receive this Scepter, the Sign of Kingly Power; the Rod of Kingdoms, the Rod of Vertue, that thou govern thy Self aright, and defend the Holy Church, and Christian People committed by God unto thy Charge, punish the Wicked, and protect the Just, and lead them in the ways of Righteousness, and that from this Temporal Kingdom thou mayst be advanced to an Eternal Kingdom, by his Goodness whose Kingdom is Everlasting. Amen.

Whilst this was pronounced by the Arch-Bishop, Mr. Henry Howard delivered to the King a rich Glove, which he put on his right hand, and then received the Scepter: And after that, the Arch-Bishop said this Prayer;

O Lord, the Fountain of all good things, &c. Grant, We beseech Thee, to this thy Servant Charles, that He may order aright the Dignity, which He hath obtained, &c.

During which time, the said Mr. Howard performed the service of supporting the Kings right Arm, according as it was adjudged to him by the Court of Claims, by vertue of holding the Manor of Workop in the County of Nottingham.

Next of all, the Arch-Bishop took the Scepter with the Dove, and gave it into the Kings Hand also, saying,

Receive the Rod of Vertue, and Equity, learn to make much of the Godly, and to terrifie the Wicked, shew the way to those that go astray, offer thy hand to those that fall, repress the proud, lift up the lowly, that Our Lord Jesus Christ may open to Thee the Door, who saith of himself, 'I am the Door, by me if any man enter, he shall be safe. And let Him be Thy help, who is the Key of David, and the Scepter of the House of Israel, 'who openeth, and no man shutteth, who shutteth, and no man openeth; who bringeth the Captive out of Prison where he sate in darknes, and in the shadow of death. That in all things thou mayest follow him, of whom the Prophet David saith, 'The Scepter of thy Kingdom is a right Scepter, 'thou hast loved Righteousness, and hated Iniquity; wherefore God, even thy God, hath appointed thee with the Oyl of gladness above thy fellows, even Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

After

1661.

After which the KING kneeled, holding both the Scepters in his Hands, whilst the Arch-Bishop thus blessed Him;

The Lord bleſſ thee, and keep thee; and as he hath made thee King over his People, ſo he ſtill proſper thee in this World, and make thee partaker of this Eternal Felicity in the World to come. Amen.

Then the KING aroſe, and ſet himſelf again in St. Edward's Chair, whileſt the Arch-Bishop and Biſhops preſent, one after another, kneeled before him, and were kiſſed by him.

In the mean time, the Kings Chair of State, wherein He was anointed, was ſet above the upper Steps at the entrance upon the Theatre, whither the KING went, as ſoon as He had performed the Ceremony of kiſſing the Biſhops, having now four Swords born naked before him, the Arch-Biſhops, Biſhops, and Great Officers attending: at his arrival there, the Arch-Biſhop ſaid this Prayer, the King kneeling,

Grant, O Lord, that the Clergy, and People, gathered together by thine Ordinance for this ſervice of the KING, may by the moſt gracious aſſiſtance of thy goodneſs, and the vigilant care of thy Servant Our KING, be continually governed, and preſerved in all happineſs.

Then the King aroſe, and repoſed himſelf in the ſaid Chair, whileſt both the Quires ſung Te Deum.

When Te Deum was ended, the King aſcended his Throne placed in the middle of the Theatre, the Swords, and Great Officers ſtanding on either ſide; as alſo the Biſhops, ſome in Copes, others in Rochets, the Arch-Biſhop then ſaying, Stand, and hold faſt from henceforth that Place, whereof hitherto You have been Heir by the Succeſſion of Your Fore-Fathers, &c.

After this, the Biſhops, and Nobility did their Homage to the King in manner following:

And firſt the Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury kneeled down before the Kings Knees, and ſaid,

I, William Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury, ſhall be Faithful and True, and Faith and Truth bear unto You, Our Sovereign Lord, and Your Heirs, Kings of England, and ſhall do, and truly acknowledge the Service of the Land, which I claim to hold of You, in the right of the Church: So help Me God.

Which ſaid, he kiſſed the Kings left Cheek.

The like did all the other Biſhops, that were preſent.

Then came up the Duke of York, with Garter, principal King of Arms, before him, and his Train born by two Gentlemen, who, being arrived at the Throne, kneeled down before the King, put off his Coronet, and did his Homage; at which the Drums beat, Trumpets ſounded, and all the People ſhouted.

The like did the Dukes of Buckingham, and Albemarle, for themſelves, and the reſt of the Dukes.

So alſo did the Marqueſſes of Worceſter, and Dorcheſter.

Next, the Earl of Oxford did homage after the ſame manner for himſelf, and all the reſt of the Earls, who attended upon him to ſignifie their conſents.

After him, Viſcount Hereford did the like for himſelf, and the reſt of the Viſcounts; and then the Drums beat, and Trumpets ſounded again, and the People ſhouted.

Laſtly, Baron Audley in like manner did homage for himſelf, and all the Baronage, who alſo accompanied him to the Throne, in teſtification of their Conſents; which being finiſhed, Drums, Trumpets and Shouts followed.

Note, That the Words of Homage were ſaid by every one of the Nobility, that kneeled down, viz.

I, N. N. do become Your Liege-man of Life, and Limb, and of Earthly Worſhip; and Faith and Truth I ſhall bear unto You, to live, and die, againſt all manner of Folks: So God Me help.

Afterwards the Duke of York, and all the Nobility ſingly aſcended the Throne, and touched the Kings Crown, promiſing by that Ceremony to be ever ready to ſupport it with all their power.

During the performing of this Solemn Ceremony, the Lord High Chancellor went to the South-Weſt, and North-fides of the Stage, and proclaimed to the People the Kings General Pardon, being attended by Mr. Garter to the South-fide, and by a Gentleman-Uſher, and two Heralds to the other two Sides.

And at theſe three Sides, at the ſame time, did the Lord Cornwallis, Treasuſer of his Majesties Houſhold, ſling abroad the Medals, both of Gold, and Silver, prepared for the Coronation, as a Princely Donation, or Largeſs, among the People.

The King being thus enthronized, the Gentlemen of his Chappel began this following Anthem, Behold O Lord, Our Defender, and look upon the Face of Thine Anointed.

The Violins, and other Instrumental Muſick, (who were robed in Scarlet Mantles, and plac'd in a Gallery erected over againſt them, on the North-fide of the Altar) anſwering alternately: at the ending of which Anthem, the Trumpets ſounded, and Drums beat again. In which time the King took off his Crown, and delivered it to the Lord High Chamberlain to hold; the Scepter with the Croſs to Mr. Henry Howard, and that with the Dove to the Duke of Albemarle.

The Epistle (taken out of the Firſt Epistle of St. Peter, the ſecond Chapter, and beginning at the eleventh Verſe) was read by the Biſhop of Chicheſter.

The Goſpel (being part of the twenty ſecond Chapter of St. Matthew, beginning at the 15th Verſe) by the Biſhop of Ely.

After

After which the Nicene Creed was began by the Bishop of London, and sung by the Gentlemen of the Chappel, with Verse, and Chorus, (that, and the rest of the special Musick, for the Solemnity, being set by Captain Cook, Master of the Children of His Majesties said Chappel.) The Violins, and other Instrumental Musick placed in the Gallery over-against them, alternately playing.

All which time the King stood by His Throne.

But towards the end of the Creed He took again his Crown from the Lord Great Chamberlain, and put it on his Head; as also the Scepter with the Cross, from Mr. Howard, and that with the Dove from the Duke of Albemarle, and prepared for His Descent from His Throne towards the Altar, to receive the Communion.

And, as soon as the singing of the Creed was fully ended, the King descended with the Crown on his Head, and Scepters in both Hands (the Bishops of Duresm, and Bath and Wells, supporting him) with the four Swords naked before, and all the great Officers attending.

In the time of this Proceeding, the Quire sung.

Let my Prayer come up into thy presence as the Incense, and the lifting up of my hand be as an Evening-Sacrifice.

Here the Arch-Bishop of Canterbury retired from the Ceremonies into St. Edward's Chappel, and thence went home, leaving the remainder of his Duty to be performed by the Bishop of London.

At the Kings approach to the Altar, the Bishop of Ely delivered unto Him Bread, and Wine, which He there offered, and then returned to the Fald-stool, on the South-side of the Altar, near his Chair of State, before which He kneeled down, and laid His Crown upon the Cushion, before Him, towards His right Hand; and the Scepter with the Dove, on his left; and gave again to Mr. Howard the Scepter with the Cross, who held it, kneeling on the Kings right Hand: the Grand Officers, and the Noble-men, with the four Swords naked, and erect, standing about Him.

Then the Bishop of London said this Prayer.

Bless, O Lord, we beseech thee, these thy Gifts, and sanctifie them unto This holy Use, &c.

At the end of which, the Lord Cornwallis Treasurer of the Household, presented the King with another Wedge of Gold; which goeth under the name of the Mark of Gold. This the King offered into the Bason, kneeling still at his Fald-stool, whilst the Bishop of London said the following Prayer, Almighty God give Thee the dew of Heaven, and the fatness of the Earth, and abundance of Corn and Wine, &c.

And next pronounced this Blessing,

Bless, O Lord, the virtuous carriage of This King, and accept the Work of His Hands: replenish the Realm with the Blessings of Heaven, of the Dew, of the Water, and of the Deeps.

Then the Bishop proceeded to the Consecration of the Sacrament: which being finished, he first of all received; next, the Dean of Westminster; then the Bishop of Bath and Wells; and lastly, the Bishop of Duresm.

These four Prelates having communicated, Preparation was made for the Kings Receiving, who kneeled all this while before His Fald-stool.

The Towel was brought thither by Mr. Rumbal on the behalf of the Master of the Wardrobe, and presented to the Bishops of Hereford and Carlisle, who held it before the King, while He received.

The Bishop of London gave the King the Bread, and the Dean of Westminster the Cup.

As soon as the King had received, this Antiphon was begun by the upper-Quire,

O hearken unto the voice of my calling, my King, and my God, &c.

In the mean while, the King returned to His Throne upon the Theatre, with the Crown on his Head, and bearing the Scepters in his Hands.

When he came thither, he put off his Crown, and delivered it to the Lord Great Chamberlain, the Scepter with the Cross to Mr. Howard, and that other with the Dove to the Duke of Albemarle.

And then the Bishop of London went on with the Communion, which being finished, the King (attended as before) descended from his Throne Crowned, with both the Scepters in his Hands.

The rest of the Regalia (which lay all this while on the Altar) being delivered to the Noble-men, that brought them in the Proceeding to the Church were carried before him, and thence the King proceeded into St. Edward's Chappel, the Organs playing all the while.

Where being arrived, he took off St. Edward's Crown, and delivered it to the Bishop of London, who immediately laid it upon St. Edward's Altar; all the rest of the Regalia were given into the hands of the Dean of Westminster, and laid there also.

Afterwards the King entred into the Traverse erected in the middle of the Wall, on the back-side of the High-Altar, and there retired, whilst he was disrobed of St. Edward's Robes by Mr. Seymour, and Mr. Asburnham, Grooms of the Bed-Chamber, on the behalf of the Lord High-Chamberlain, Mr. Eliot, Mr. Progers, Colonel Philips, and Mr. Chiffinch assisting.

These Robes were laid on St. Edwards Altar, by the Bishop of Duresm; and afterwards delivered to the Dean of Westminster to lay up with the Regalia.

After this, the King was arrayed in his Purple Robes, and then came near to St. Edward's Altar, where the Bishop of London stood ready with the Imperial Crown in his hands, and set that upon the Kings Head; thereupon the King took the Scepter with the Cross in his right Hand, with the Globe in his left; and immediately the Proceeding (ordered also by the Heralds) began thence into Westminster-Hall, the same way that he came, and attended after the same manner, saving that the Noble-men, and Bishops, which brought the Regalia to the Abbey-Church, went not now immediately before the King, as they did then, but were ranked in places according to their Degrees, and Consecrations: all the Noblemen, with their Coronets, and Caps on their Heads. The Kings of Arms marched likewise with their Crowns on.

G g g g g they

The Proceeding being entred into Westminster-Hall, the Nobility, and others, who had Tables assigned them, went, and placed themselves thereat; but the King (attended with the Great-Officers) withdrew into the Inner-Court of Wards, for half an hour.

In the mean time, all the Tables in the Hall were served, (viz.) before the King's Service came up; and were placed in this manner:

On the right hand of the King's Throne, below in the Hall, were set two Tables, one beneath the other: at the upper-end of the first next the State, (which had two Side-Tables to serve it) sate the Bishops, and below them the Judges, with the rest of the Long-Robe.

At the second Table, (which had two Side-Board-Tables likewise to serve it) sate the Masters of the Chancery, and the Six-Clerks.

And here, at this Table, were the Barons of the Cinque-Ports necessitated to sit, although the upper-end of the first Table was appointed for them.

The Occasion this: No sooner had the aforesaid Barons brought up the King to the Foot of the Stairs in Westminster-Hall, ascending to His Throne, and turned on the left hand (towards their own Table) out of the way, but the Kings Foot-men most insolently, and violently seized upon the Canopy, which the Barons endeavouring to keep and defend, were by their number and strength dragged down to the lower end of the Hall, nevertheless still keeping their hold: and, had not Mr. Owen YORK-Herald been accidentally near the Hall-Door, and seeing the Contest, caused the same to be shut, the Foot-men had certainly carried it away by force. But in the interim also, (speedy notice hereof having been given the King) one of the Querries were sent from Him, with Command, to imprison the Foot-men and dismiss them out of His Service, which put an end to the present Disturbance.

These Foot-men were also commanded to make their submission to the Court of Claims (which was accordingly done by them, the 30th of April following, and the Canopy then delivered back to the said Barons.)

Whilst this Disturbance happened, the upper-end of the aforesaid Table was taken up by the Bishops, Judges, &c. and hereupon it came to pass, that the Barons of the Cinque-Ports lost their Places, and were necessitated to sit down at the said second Table, with the Masters of Chancery, &c. where there was Room left by some of the Long-Robe, that sate at the Upper-Table.

Upon the left hand of the Kings Throne, below, on the other side of the Hall, was placed likewise a long Table, which reached down near to the Common-Pleas-Court, whereat the Nobility dined; and this Table had four Side-board-Tables to serve it.

And behind this, close to the Wall, at a shorter Table, sate the Lord Major, Aldermen, Recorder, and twelve chief Citizens of London, who had also two Side-Tables to serve them.

Lastly, within the Court of Common-Pleas was a Table with one Side-Table to serve it, set for the Officers of Arms, whereat they also dined. Each Table was furnished with three Courses answerable to that of the Kings, besides the Banquet.

A little before the King returned to Dinner, two Esquires of the Body, viz. Ferdinando Marsham, and Henry Norwood, took their Seats upon two little Foot-stools, on either side of the foot of the Kings Chair, (placed in the middle of the Table) and there sate until the King came in to Dinner; when rising, and performing their Duty in placing the Kings Robes for his better conveniency of sitting, they sate down again at the Kings Feet a good part of Dinner-time, and until the King gave them leave to rise; He accepting that time of Session in full performance of their Service.

On the right Side of the Throne was erected a Gallery, for the Kings of Arms Heralds, and Pursuivants; and opposite to that, on the other side, another for the Musick; and below, on the old Scaffolds, next the Court of Common-Pleas, stood the Kings Trumpeters.

The Proceeding at Carrying up of the First Course to the KINGS Table.

At

1661.

At the lower end of the Hall, YORK-Herald proclaimed the Challenge, in these words following:

The Form of the Challenge, however omitted in Mr. Ashmoles Original, being in all the rest more Compleat and Correct, we have supplied out of the other Narratives which was since done, and extracted out of his

IF any Person, of what degree soever, high or low, shall deny, or gain-say Our Sovereign Lord King CHARLES the Second, King of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, Son and next Heir to Our Sovereign Lord CHARLES the First, the last King deceased, to be Right Heir to the Imperial Crown of this Realm of England, or that he ought not to enjoy the same; here is his Champion, who saith, that he lieth, and is a false Traytor, being ready in Person to Combate with him, and in this Quarrel will adventure his Life against him, on what day soever he shall be appointed.

Thereupon the Champion threw down his Gantlet, which lying some small time, and no body taking it up, it was delivered unto him again by YORK-Herald. Then all advanced forward, until the Champion came to the middle of the Hall, where YORK-Herald made the like Proclamation, and the Gantlet was again thrown down, taken up, and returned to the Champion, who advanced to the foot of the ascending steps to the State, and at the top of the said steps, the said Herald proclaimed the said Challenge the third time; whereupon the Champion threw down his Gantlet again, which no body taking up, it was delivered unto him.

This being done, the Earl of Pembroke and Montgomery, (assisted, as before) presented on the Knee to the King a Gilt Cup with a Cover, full of Wine, who drank to his Champion, and by the said Earl sent him the Cup; and he, after three Reverences, drank it all off, went a little backward, and so departed out of the Hall, taking the said Cup for his Fee, according as had been adjudged him by the said Court of Claims:

When this Solemnity was finished, the Kings Heralds and Pursuivants descended from their Gallery, and went into the Hall, to the lower end of the Noble-mens Table, and there all together made their Reverence. Thence they proceeded a little further, and there made a second Reverence; and the like Reverence at the steps ascending to the State: Where all standing still, Garret, Principal King of Arms, cried Large's thrice, and proclaimed the Kings Style in Latin, French, and English, making Reverence betwixt every Style. At the finishing of which, they all retired backward into the midst of the Hall, and there, after crying Large's again thrice, he proclaimed the Kings Style, as before. Lastly, they went yet backwards to the end of the said Noble-mens Table, and did the same again; and from thence into the Common-Pleas-Court, to Dinner.

Immediately after this, the second Course was brought up by the Gentlemen-Pensioners, with the former Solemnity.

And the last Dish being carried by Erasmus Smith Esquire, he having delivered the same to the Table, presented the King with three Maple-Cups, on the behalf of Robert Bernham Esquire, who was seized of the Mannour of Nether-Bilington in the County of Kent.

Lastly, The Lord Mayor of London presented the King with Wine in a Golden Cup, having a Cover; of which the King, having drank, the said Lord Mayor received it for his Fee.

By this time the day being far spent, the King (having water brought him by the Earl of Pembroke, and his Assistants) washed, and rose from Dinner before the third Course was brought in; and retiring into the Inner-Court of Wards, he there disrobed himself: and from thence he went privately to his Barge, which waited for him at the Parliament-Stairs, and so to the Privy-Stairs at White-Hall, where he landed.

It is a thing very memorable, that towards the end of Dinner-time, (although all the former part of the day, and also the preceding day, in which the King made his Cavalcade through London, were the only fair days that we enjoyed of many, both before, and after) it began to Thunder and Lighten very smartly; which, however some sort of people were apt to interpret as ominous, and ill-boding, yet it will be no difficult matter to evidence from Antiquity, that Accidents of this nature, though happily they might astonish and amaze the common Drove of men, were by the most Prudent and Sagacious looked upon as a prosperous and happy Pre-sage. And of this, Virgil gives us a very pertinent example (in the Eighth Book of his Aeneids) where Evander, having addressed himself in a Speech to Aeneas for aid against the Hetrurians, and he being solicitous how to answer his request, mark what Sign was immediately sent from Heaven,

Namque improvise vibratus ab Aethere fulgor Cum sonitu venit, &c.

For suddenly from Heaven a brandished Flash With Thunder came, &c.

And presently after the Poet adds,

Obstupere animis alti, sed Troius Heros Agnovit sonitum, & Diva promissa Parentis.

While other stood amazed, the Hero knew His Mothers Promise by the Sound that flew.

The same Author, in another place, * mentions the same thing, as a testimony of Prayers * Lib. 2. heard, and answered; as when Old Anchises, seeing the Lambent flame upon his Grand-child Julius his head, lifted up his hands to Heaven, and prayed to Jove for help, and direction, he was thus answered;

Vix ea fatus erat Senior, subitoque fragore Intonuuit laevum, &c.

Scarce had the grave Sire spoke, when suddenly It thundered prosperous, &c.

For so Intonuuit laevum is interpreted by Servius, according to the Maxim of the Ancient Augurs, who interpret Thunder from the North, that is, (as they, contrary to the common Astronomers, accounted it) the left part of Heaven, for a prosperous Omen.

But, in reference to our present purpose, we may proceed to a larger Interpretation, and conclude, clude, that the Heavens, with the Volleys of Thunder, and nimble Flashes of Lightning, seemed to give a Plaudite and Acclamation to this Grand and Sacred Solemnity, in like manner as we Mortals use to close our greater Triumphs with Fire-works, Bonfires, and the loud Report of our Great Ordnance: this Terrestrial Thunder being but the Imitator and Counterfeit of the Heavenly Artillery.

And so I observe it expounded by Claudian in these Verses, †

† Claud. de
Conf. Probrini & Olybii vers. 205.

*Ut Sceptrum gessere manu, membrisque rigentes
Aptavere togas, Signum dat summus hiulca
Nube Pater, gratamque facem per inane rotantes Prospera vibrati sonuerunt Omnia Nimbi.*

As soon as Rob'd, and Scepter'd, Jove aloud
His Signal Favour thunders from a Cloud, Successful Lightning through Heav'n's Arches shines;
Both at his Coronation happy Signs.

Thus having travell'd through a HISTORY fraught with Troubles and Confusions, an Unnatural and Intestine War, succeeded by a long time of Usurpation and Mis-rule; and now having at length arriv'd to such a point of Settlement and Right restor'd, as promises a long continued Calm and Peaceful Government, we glad to have found such a convenient Haven, shall here chuse to cast our Anchor; and though several things have hapned from the Coronation to this present time (as the Kings Marriage with the Daughter of Portugal, the Transactions of the present Parliament, with other matters sufficiently Memorable; yet in regard we cannot Close at a more happy Period, we shall reserve as well something of what is past, as what is yet to come, for a farther Continuation, as likewise the observation of that Method which our Historian ever observes at the end of every Kings Reign, that time only admitting of the said Method. And if the last Part of our HISTORY somewhat exceed in Bulk what may be thought proportionable to the rest, it will no doubt be in a great measure excus'd by the consideration of what manner of Times we have had to set forth an Interval of such Wonders, such strange and Capricious Revolutions as are scarce to be parallell'd by any Age or Kingdom, hoping that the Intricate Turns and Labyrinths of Fortune being now at length run out, the Course and Stream of the History will run more smooth and clear through all the subsequent Years (which God grant may be many and prosperous) of his present Majesties Reign; than whom, never was any Prince likely to prove a more glorious President to those that after him shall sit at the Helm of State, both in respect of his innumerable other Vertues and Regal Endowments, and particularly of his admirable skill and understanding in that which is the Bulwark of the Nation; the improvement whereof so mainly imports his own Glory and Renown above all other Princes of the World, and the Reputation and Enrichment of his Subjects; a thing wherein he hath ever shew'd himself to be most Zealously concern'd.
